1. [ca. 18 ca.]*באד : [“ ... Sa]*baōth Bilabel/Grohmann, followed by Frankfurter in Meyer/Smith, plausibly suggest [πῆρονος ἐτερεῖα ca.]*באד, rendering “the throne upon which Iao Sabaoth sits”.

2. ἡγάρθηται : “and he stands” Bilabel/Grohmann translate “he shall not stand” (“er soll nicht stehen”).

3. ᾠαντεύοντο : “until he sends” Frankfurter translates “until he tramples them”.

9–10. †ΓΑΡΚΟ ΜΜΩΤΗ ΜΠΟΥΧΑΪ : “I adjure you by the wellbeing” Frankfurter translates “I adjure you and your healing”.

11–12. νεσθῶ οὕωμ · οὔτε ννεσθῶ ω : “may she be unable to eat and unable to drink”
An example of the motif LOVE IS ABSTINENCE, for which see the note to PCM I 17 back l. 44–front
l. 36.

16. Ἰὼε ἑωραρεῖν κωρὲτ κιμ ἐρωτῆντ : “just as the fire moves you” Both of the rituals in this manuscript seem to involve placing an applied object in the fire in order to apply the burning of love to the rituals’ targets by persuasive analogy; for a discussion of the motif LOVE IS FIRE, see the notes to PCM I 3 l. front col. 2 33–38.

19. ϣⲡ/ ⲛⲉϣⲱⲗ/ : “draw the images” These instructions seem to describe the creation and manipulation of a pair of two-dimensional figures, one male, on plates, with the two perhaps being bound together with linen. This is similar to other Coptic and Arabic recipes describing the use of effigies to represent the male and female targets of love spells, which are usually brought together, facing one another as part of the ritual; cf. Dosoo 2018: 25–46; Dosoo 2023a. Bilabel/Grohmann do not note any image on this first page that might have served as a model.

19–20, 21, 23. ⲡⲉϣⲁⲕⲛⲧⲩ : “what you will bring” The meaning is obscure; it may refer to an object belonging to the target, known in Greek as οὐσία (ousia, “essence”). Often pieces of hair or fingernails are used, but the fact that it must be drawn on would imply a piece of clothing or another intimate possession. For the concept of ousia, cf. Gager 1992: 16–18; Faraone 2020: 4 n. 14. For the construction using a substantivised circumstantial (ⲡⲉϣⲱⲗⲧⲩ), common in the later manuscripts of this volume, see Richter 2017b.

27. ⲉⲛⲁϥϥⲁⲗⲃⲣⲁⲛ : “with saffron” For the use of ink made from saffron in Coptic magic, see Richter 2023: 166–68.

28–31. These names are probably those of demons. Aside from ⲡⲗⲁⲃⲃⲱⲗⲟⲥ (“the Devil”), we may compare ϣⲱϣⲓⲛ ϣⲁϣⲣⲁⲛ ϣⲱϣⲧⲁⲃⲁⲛ ϣⲱϣⲧⲁⲃⲉⲛⲉⲓ in BKU I 2 (KYP M300), alternative names for ⲥⲁⲧⲁⲛⲁⲥ ⲡⲗⲁⲃⲃⲱⲗⲟⲥ (“Satan the Devil”). ⲡⲓⲛⲓⲡⲓⲛ in PCM I 31 (KYP M366) is a being who causes strife. The rest are the names of pagan deities, likewise understood as demons: ⲡⲓⲗⲉϣⲥ (“Zeus”), ⲡⲁⲡⲱⲗⲗⲱⲛ (“Apollo”), ⲡⲓⲕⲱⲛⲟⲥ (“K(ῑ)onos”), ⲡⲁⲛⲧⲓⲛⲟⲥ (“Antinous”); cf. Blumell/Dosoo 2018: 249–250, in particular n. 133.

32–34. This is likely a reference to the story of the Devil scraping his sweat into the water of the four rivers of Eden so that Eve would drink it and be filled with desire, allowing her to be deceived into eating the fruit of the Tree of Life, an event mentioned in the Questions of Bartholomew IV.59 (Bonwetsch 1987: 26); cf. the love spell BM EA 10376 (Zellman-Rohrer 2022a: no. 2; KYP M286) ll. 15–18: “the lust which Mastema scraped? into a bowl and cast into the source of the four rivers, and he bared himself? in it so that the children of men would drink from it and be filled with the lust of the Devil” (ⲧⲉⲡⲉⲓⲛⲓⲁ ⲧⲁⲓ ⲧⲉⲛⲧⲁⲛⲁⲥⲧⲁⲛⲁ ⲃⲏⲣⲉⲥⲥⲉ ⲛⲓⲟⲥ ⲉⲛ ⲟⲩⲑⲉⲗⲗⲉ ⲁⲩⲛⲟⲩⲥ ⲉⲣⲁⲓ ⲉⲛ ⲧⲁⲣⲭⲏ ⲛⲡⲉϣⲧⲱⲟⲩ ⲛⲉⲣⲟ ⲁⲩⲩⲱⲕⲁⲕ ⲉⲃⲱⲗ ⲛⲉⲛⲧⲥ ⲭⲉⲕⲁⲥ ⲉⲣⲉⲛⲱⲛⲣⲉ ⲛⲏⲣⲱⲛⲉ ⲥⲱ [ⲉ]ⲃⲱⲗ ⲛⲉⲛⲧⲥ ⲛⲥⲉⲛⲟⲩ ⲉⲃⲱⲗ ⲉⲛ ⲧⲉⲡⲉⲓⲛⲓⲁ ⲛⲡⲗⲁⲃⲃⲱⲗⲟⲥ ⲁⲗⲗ ⲥⲱ ⲉⲃ[ⲱⲗ] ⲛⲉⲛⲧⲥ ⲁⲩⲛⲟⲩ ⲉⲃⲱⲗ ⲉⲛ ⲧⲉⲡⲉⲓⲛⲓⲁ ⲛⲡⲗⲁⲃⲃⲱⲗⲟⲥ); see the discussion in Zellman-Rohrer 2022a: 122.

... disturbance and madness ... she will come to NN, child of NN, and [she will] ... and an unending desire ... that you go to every place in which NN is, |⁵ and you snatch her and bring her to NN, child of NN, from every place in which she is, even if she is eating, even if she is drinking, even if she is breastfeeding, even if she is in the mountains, even if she is in the waters, compel her, disturb her until she comes to NN, child of NN! I adjure you, *Michael, by <the> light upon which you are mounted, |¹⁰ you and your companions who are with you in the same rank, that as soon as I name your names and I place you in this fire or⁷ <at> the door of the house or in a *pot or in oil, in short, every place over which I name your names and give it to NN, child of NN, may she go to |¹⁵ NN, child of NN, every year and every month and every day! May you (s.) take these adjurations in your ears! You are the one who caused bees⁷ to come, indeed you have caused the camel to chew, you caused the female dogs to go under the male dog; you have caused the [female cat⁷] to come under the male cat, you and also your companions. You are the one who disturbs the reason⁷ |²⁰ and wisdom⁷ of NN, child of NN, so that you may bring her to NN, child of NN, [through your⁷]

1. [ἡρετῆ ὄγῳ]τοῦτο : “... disturbance” There would seem to be space for only about five letters before the visible τ, but all of the elements here are necessary; perhaps there was another lost line at the end of the recto.

9. νογῶν ἐτεκαλῆ ἐξαι ἐχω : “by <the> light upon which you are mounted” Perhaps restore “<chariot> of light” (ἡπεκάρη νογῶν), compare the chariot of light (πεκάρη νογῶν) given to Michael in the Investiture of Michael (CC 488; Müller 1962: 19.6).

15. ρῶν : “year” This word is very uncertain; the omicron may be inserted above the line.

16–18. For similar descriptions of women maddened in love behaving like animals, cf. the note to PCM I 7 ll. 32–36. By comparison with PCM I 28 p. 6 ll. 4–5, we might perhaps restore at the end ακτρε τῆς γυναικὸς ἐλθεῖν ὑπὸ τοῦ ἀνδρὸς (“you caused the female cat to go under the male cat”; cf. the notes to PCM I 28). Bilabel/Grohmann translate “Abakuk, you caused the female dogs (?) to come under the dog (?), you also caused the peasants to come under the...” (“... Abakuk, du hast veranlaßt, daß die Hündinnen (?) unter den Hund (?) gekommen sind, du hast veranlaßt, daß auch die Bauern unter den... gekommen sind...”). Frankfurter in Meyer/Smith translates “You have called, NOUNOU ABAKOUK, you have called. The dogs come under the dog. You have called the little ones to come under the ...”.

Sheet of paper with significant damage to the left and lower parts; traces of 3 vertical and 4 horizontal creases demonstrate folding, along which much of the damage has been sustained. The middle-left and bottom left parts are missing.

The manuscript was acquired in 1896 by Dr. Carl Reinhardt as part of a large number of papyri, parchments and wooden tablets and sold in 1897 to the University of Heidelberg, where it remains.¹ Manuscripts acquired within this lot came from the Faiyum, El-Ashmunein (Hermopolis), and Al-Fustat (Old Cairo). Despite the lack of the most prominent dialectal features associated with the group, the similarity in dating and content to the Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library (PCM I 21–29) perhaps suggests that this manuscript, like them, originated in the Faiyum.

The text is written with a black carbon ink on the front and back,² with kharaktēres visible on the back, either connected to one of the texts on the front or to a now lost text which existed below it. The text is written in right-sloping, generally bilinear, bimodal majuscule. The hand is fairly, but not entirely, regular: the lines often slope, and the letter heights show some variation. ⲙ is curved but not flat, while the descenders of ρ, ς, and ϣ reach slightly below the line. There are slight serifs on the lower and left strokes of the τ, but the hand is otherwise undecorated. The γ consistently takes the form of a Latin lowercase y. σ seems to be written with a counterclockwise stroke, as with other texts of similar date from the Faiyum (cf. pp. 260–261). Horizontal dividing lines (both simple and decorated) is used extensively on the front to separate recipes. Supralinear strokes are used above voces magicae and other names, which may also be separated by colons.

² We are again grateful to Krisztina Hevesi for sharing her work on the inks of the Heidelberg manuscripts; for the process of determining the ink, see pp. 28–29.

As discussed in the introduction (p. 27–28), the use of paper suggests a tenth century date at the earliest, and a hand with many similar traits may be found in CPR II 1 ll. 29–40 (TM 82031), dated to year 410 of the Hijra (1019–1020 CE). We thus propose a tenth to eleventh century date for this manuscript.

The language of the manuscript is largely Sahidic, but with some surprising features; apart from dittography (μμ, εε) and an instance of the absence of ν › μ assimilation, we see some surprising phonological substitutions (ε for ^sογ, ι for ^sαι). The lambdistic writing of φαρμακεία as φαλμακία (front l. 1) may confirm our proposal that the manuscript originates in the Faiyum.

KD, EL, MP & JS, edited from photograph; tracings by JS.

1. ⲉⲁⲡⲟⲧⲓ ⲛⲉⲁⲗⲛⲁⲕⲓⲁ : “ cup of sorcery” Probably a reference to some kind of harmful ‘potion or ‘poison’; cf. the note to PCM I 26 p. 16 l. 16 and the glossary s.v. *cup.

3. ⲕⲣ This letter or sign is uncertain; it may be a kharaktēr. Here we read it as the word “cross”.

6. This recipe may have been preceded by kharaktēres which were to be copied. There are traces to the lower left after this line which may be a letter (perhaps a ⲛ), or part of the elaborate divider.

6. [ⲟⲩⲱⲛⲣⲉ ⲕⲟⲩⲓ ⲉⲩⲣⲓⲛⲛⲉ : “[a[?]] small child who cries” For other Coptic procedures for crying children, see PCM I 36 front col. 2 ll. 1–10; Mich.Ms. 136 (Zellmann-Rohrer/Love 2022; KYP M220) p. 13 ll. 5–6, and the recipes for Psalms 8, 62, 95, 114 & 130 in the Guide to the Psalms (Henein/Bianquis 1975). Those for Psalms 8, 62 & 130 give indications about the possible causes and consequences of “crying”: the first adds that the child may also be unable to sleep, the second that the crying may be preventing breathing, and the last that the crying may be due to weaning.

7. ⲟⲩⲥⲣⲓⲛⲓⲉ ⲉⲣⲉⲡⲉⲥⲛⲟⲩ ⲉⲁⲣⲟⲥ : “a [woman] who has blood under her” For other recipes for the healing of uterine bleeding with the use of amulets, see PCM I 2 l. 1 and the accompanying note.

10. ⲟⲩⲥⲱⲡⲉ ⲉⲥ ⲁⲩⲟⲡⲩ ⲟⲩⲁⲗⲁⲗⲟⲥ ⲡⲛⲧⲁⲩⲱⲗ ⲉⲱⲟⲗ : “A capture[?]. He has been seized, a bridegroom[?], the one who has been released” Perhaps understand “For a ‘seizure’ that has seized a bridegroom, in order that he be released” (ⲟⲩⲥⲱⲡⲉ ⲉⲛⲧⲁⲩⲱⲡⲉ ⲛⲟⲩⲁⲗⲁⲗⲟⲥ ⲉⲧⲣⲉⲩⲱⲗ ⲉⲱⲟⲗ). Apparently intended to treat a (newly-married?) husband suffering from magically-induced impotence; cf. PCM I 26 p. 16 ll. 6–8; the recipes associated with Psalms 44, 117, and 126 in Henein/Bianquis 1975; with Cherkashina/Kuzin 2022 for the Syriac tradition; and Chassinat 1955 (KYP M44) p. 1 ll. 6–10, this last a Coptic recipe intended to bind a bridegroom.

12. ⲛⲁⲣⲕⲁⲣⲧⲁⲙⲁ : “garden cress?” The suggestion to read “cardamom” here is very speculative; ⲕⲁⲣⲧⲁⲙⲁ is a plausible Coptic rendering of Greek κάρδαμον, which seems refer to garden cress (Lepidium sativum L.), but an Arabised form with an initial al- does not seem to be otherwise attested; the normal Arabic name for garden cress is حرف huruf, given as the equivalent of ⲕⲁⲣⲁⲗⲁⲙⲟⲛ in the Scala magna (Macomber 2020: 139). Garden cress is mentioned as an ingredient in several ancient and mediaeval Greek and Arabic medical texts; cf. Lev/Amar 2008: 172–174.

1. p. 1 ll. 1–27 – p. 2 ll. 1–26: Invocation for bowl divination (KYP T1085)

Considerably damaged paper bifolio containing three recipes for various purposes. As David Tibet has suggested, the bifolio may have been part of a larger codex which would have opened from either side, as pages 3 and 4 are written at 180° with respect to pages 1 and 2.¹ The bifolio seems to have been further folded before deposition, with 4 horizontal and 3 vertical creases visible on each page,² resulting in symmetrical damage patterns, perhaps due to insects. There is also notable discolouration, particularly on the upper edge of pages 3–4 near the spine.

The manuscript was purchased by the Papyruskartell (German Papyrus Cartel) in 1909, as part of a lot including inventory numbers 550–582.³ Based on the dialect, similar to that of many manuscripts from the Faiyum dating to the same period (cf. below), we propose that it may also have originated from that region.

The manuscript is written rather densely, with thick, consistent strokes in a black or dark brown ink. The script is a right-sloping majuscule, bilinear, with serifs on the horizontal bar of τ and, to a lesser extent, †. The α has a small and very rounded bowl, while the oblique stroke sometimes extends to the right. The lower belly of β is markedly larger than the top one. The strokes of ε, κ, and λ consistently do not fully join, and there is some bimodularity in the narrowing of ε, o, and c. γ and ς are bilinear, and the tail of the ϣ is almost horizontal,

¹ Tibet 2014: 131–132. Tibet (2014: 131) also notes “some evidence of holes for a binding-cord in the centre of the leaf, though the damage to the manuscript makes it difficult to be certain of this.”

² Cf. PCM I 4 & 28, codices which also seem to have been folded prior to deposition.

³ Inventaire des papyrus, Coptes, Coptes-Arabes, IPC, IPCM, Bibliothèque Nationale et Universitaire, Strasbourg.

while the ascender of the σ is rather long. The copyist respects spaces between lines and letters; on page 1, the line shows a marked upwards slope. No dividing lines are visible on the preserved sections. Supralinear strokes are used above voces magicae, and dots are used above certain letters in a similar manner to the supralinear stroke or later djinkim. Colons are used to separate individual words or phrases. As Tibet (2014: 132) notes, the use of paper suggests a tenth century date at the earliest. A tenth or eleventh century date is likewise likely based on the hand, which notably demonstrates the “flat μ ”.⁴

The dialect is a form of Sahidic heavily influenced by a Middle Egyptian dialect, likely that of the Faiyum, but lacking in the lambdacism associated with the classical forms of Faiyumic (F4/F5), which is very close to that found in the archive known as the ‘Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library’.⁵

We have renumbered the pages assuming that the bifolio was originally written in such a way that two pages in the same orientation followed one another when folded; as a result, our page 1 = Tibet’s Verso (1); page 2 = Recto (1); page 3 = Recto (inverted); page 4 here = Verso (inverted). On page 4, we number the lines continuously, whereas Tibet numbers each text area separately. Tibet does not generally mark supralineation in his edition, and so we do not mark divergences in the treatment of supralineation in the apparatus.

pp. 1–2. Bowl divination procedure: This represents a rare instance of bowl divination ('lecanomancy') in the Coptic magical corpus. The practitioner speaks the formula over a cup of water and a scryer (cf. notes to ll. 17–18 below) looks into the water to see a vision in which the answer to a question is revealed by a superhuman being who appears in the water. There is a close parallel with the only other published Coptic bowl divination recipe, BM EA 10391 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no 1; KYP M302) front ll. 38–49. Particularly close are ll. 41–42: “and you come down upon this cup of water that is placed before me and you fill it for me with light like the sun and the moon seven times seven times” (ⲛⲧⲉⲧⲛⲉⲓ ⲉⲣⲣⲁⲓ ⲉⲭⲏ ⲡⲉⲁⲡⲟⲧ ⲛⲏⲟⲟϥ ⲉⲧⲕⲏ ⲉⲣⲣⲁⲓ ⲛⲡⲁⲙⲧⲟ ⲉⲃⲟⲗ ⲛⲧⲉⲧⲛⲏⲟⲣϥ ⲛⲁⲓ ⲛⲟϥⲟⲩⲏ ⲛⲟⲉ ⲛⲡⲣⲏ ⲙⲏ ⲡⲟⲗ ⲛⲗ ⲛⲕⲟⲃ ⲛⲟⲟⲡ). Other divination rituals in the Coptic magical corpus are found in Cairo JdE 45060 (Kropp 1931: I no. K; KYP M303) front ll. 38–40; P.Mich.Inv. 593 (Worrell 1930; KYP M9) p. 10 ll. 4–8; P.Mich.Inv. 594 (KYP M9) back ll. 12–14; P.Macq. I 1 (KYP M167) p. 15 ll. 20–21 (all dream divination procedures); BM EA 10391 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no 1; KYP M302) front ll. 50–58: (thumbnail divination (?)); cf. GEMF 57/PGM IV (KYP M3) ll. 11–25 & 88–93, two Old Coptic divination texts (cf. Love 2016: 124–149). On bowl divination in general, see Hopfner 1932; Dosoo 2014: 253–257, 398–399 et passim; Nagel 2017.

15. ⲉⲓⲛⲏⲁⲩⲉⲗⲓⲧⲏⲛ ⲡⲏ : “from the ninth? heaven” If this reading is correct it would represent an unusual example of a nine-heaven scheme in a post-fourth century Coptic-language source; more common in Coptic literature are three- or seven-heaven schemes, e.g., Apocalypse of Paul (CC 30) in Lanzillotta/van der Vliet 2022 214.24–25, 215 (trans.); Pseudo-Timothy of Alexandria, Institution of Abbaton (CC 405) in Budge 1914: 246.4, 493 (trans.). Nine-heaven schemes are attested, for example, in earlier Hermetic sources (see Robinson 2000: III 342). In such schemes, the first seven heavens correspond to the seven planetary spheres, the eighth may correspond to the sphere of the fixed stars, and the ninth to the supercelestial sphere beyond this.

17–18. ⲛⲡⲓⲁⲩⲉⲣⲓⲧⲟⲩⲧⲟⲩ : “of my scryer” This word also appears in the parallel text BM EA 10391 (Zellmann 2022a: no. 1; KYP M302) front ll. 42–48: “(may) you fill my eyes with divinity and those of my scryer? with light ... (may) [you fill] my eyes & those of my scryer? with light” (ⲛⲧⲉⲧⲛⲏⲉⲗ ⲛⲁⲃⲁⲗ ⲉⲛ ⲡⲁⲩⲉⲱⲧⲏⲥ ⲛⲁⲡⲁⲩⲉⲣⲓⲧⲟⲩⲧⲏⲥ ⲛⲟⲩⲏ ... ⲛⲧⲉⲧⲛⲏⲉⲗ ⲛⲁⲃⲁⲗ ⲛⲁⲡⲁⲩⲉⲣⲓⲧⲟⲩⲧⲏⲥ ⲛⲟⲩⲏ). As noted by Zellmann-Rohrer (2022a: 102), this would seem to be a loan of an otherwise unattested Greek term θεωριστής, formed from the scarcely-attested verb θεωρίζω (cf. θεωρέω; see Horrocks 1997: 239 for verb formations of this type) by the addition of the agentive suffix -ιστής. In meaning it would be comparable to θεωρός or θεωρητής “one who observes”. Here we understand it as referring to the boy medium who looks into the bowl for the practitioner and receives the vision, comparable to the term ἐπόπτης (“observer”) used in older Greek magical and theurgic contexts (see, e.g., Iamblichus, On the Mysteries III.13; PGM VII/GEMF 74.570–572). Zellmann-Rohrer (2022a: 89) translates “vision”. On scryers, also known as “child mediums” or “seers”, cf. Johnston 2001; Dosoo 2014: 329–334, 391–393.

24. ⲉⲁⲣⲧ : “clothes” perhaps correct to ⲉⲁⲣⲧ, ⲉⲁⲣ “silver”, which would fit the context well here.

Image: We propose that this page contains a binding or silencing curse based on the presence of a tableau paralleled in the binding/silencing curse in P.Würzburg inv. 42 (Brusch 1978; M494); a similar, albeit much faded, tableau is found in P.Berol. 20911 (Beltz 1984: no. III 32; KYP M219). These images seem to represent the curse's targets flanked by spirit-beings who threaten and bind them; for a discussion, see Dosoo 2023a: 177–183.

Parchment sheet surviving in four fragments organised by Bilabel and Grohmann into three sections—A (composed of two fragments), B, and C.¹ Fragments A and B are very damaged along the edges; the major breaks within the sheet appear to be cuts made with a sharp knife.² Most of the fragments are discoloured on the outer rim; the edges are brown, while the inner side is yellowish in colour. The fragments have been considerably deformed, likely as a result of moisture, giving a misleading impression of their shape when photographed in two dimensions. Section A, composed of two fragments, was cut sharply in the middle, where it does not show any discoloration. C is the smallest fragment, discoloured on all sides, and apparently without any sharp cuts. Bilabel and Grohmann observed small crystals on the parchment, leading them to assume that it had been in contact with soil.³ As we show in plates XV–XVI fragment A seems to represent the lower part of the sheet, and fragment B and C the top right and left respectively. Significant fragments are missing from the upper middle, and lower right (viewed from the front). A fragment is missing from the middle. The back (flesh) is written at 180° to the front (hair), and its lower part is left blank. Note that Bilabel and Grohmann refer to our front as the “verso” and our back as the “recto”; we consider the hair side to be the first written, since it is fully covered with text, while the flesh side seems to have had a shorter pair of recipes added at a later moment.

The provenance of the manuscript is unknown. Bilabel and Grohmann noted that the manuscript was in the collection of the University of Heidelberg before 1933. However, they refer to it by two different sigla: “Inv. No. 1658” in the edition, and “P. Heidelberg, Nr. 564a” in the contents.⁴ A different manuscript from Heidelberg with the latter inventory number (564a) was acquired in 1897 by the University of Heidelberg and published by Quecke in 1963.⁵ Unfortunately, we have not been able to find precise acquisition information on this object.⁶

The manuscript is written with black ink, likely by the same scribe in two different styles, likely with two different writing implements. The initial 17 lines of the recto are written in thicker strokes in browner ink, which has run slightly; the remaining lines on the front, and those on the back, are written with thinner strokes, in a darker and sharper ink. Both inks are opaque under visible, near-infrared, and ultraviolet light, but the initial lines of the recto lose some of their opacity under near-infrared; this suggests that the initial 17 lines of the recto are written in iron-gall ink, and the rest of the manuscript in carbon ink.⁷ The two styles seem to display the same ductus, and likely represent the same hand. The text is written in a bimodal, largely bilinear majuscule with a slight rightwards slope. The bowl of the α is often quite angular, with a long descending tail; the β is enlarged, with its lower bowl descending below the lower line. There are marked serifs on the left part of the horizontal bar of τ, and on the ascending strokes of λ and χ. μ is curved but not flat, while ω and q have long descenders. The ascendent of the σ is very long. Horizontal dividing lines are used to separate recipes on the front, but not the back, which seems to rather be organised spatially, with the second recipe (ll. 18–19) written below the first, leaving a small gap, and another recipe, including kharaktēres, written at 90° clockwise to the left. Supralineation

⁴ Bilabel/Grohmann 1934: xii, 384; cf. Seider 1964: 196 n. 79, who repeats the mistake found in the contents.

⁷ As with all of the discussions of ink for the manuscripts belonging to the University of Heidelberg, we are very grateful to Krisztina Hevesi for sharing her preliminary results with us. For a more detailed discussion of the process of determining inks, see pp. 28–29.

is used very sparingly, only on the back and only on abbreviations and one vox magica.

Bilabel and Grohmann suggested a ninth century date for the ‘hand’ of style 1, and a tenth century date for the ‘hand’ of style 2.⁸ Similar hands can be found in the colophon on fol. 82v of BL Ms. Or 7026 (CLM 192), dated to 1005 CE; CPR II 1 ll. 29–40 (TM 82031), dated to year 410 of the Hijra (1019–1020 CE); and P.Teschlot 2 (TM 84991), dated to 1023 CE. We thus propose a slightly later date in the tenth or eleventh century.

The fragmentary nature and obscurity of much of the text makes it difficult to be certain of its dialectal features, but it seems to represent for the most part a relatively standard form of Sahidic; the most common deviations from the literary standard are the use of ε for both the supralinear stroke alone and for ⲥ̅. The latter is characteristic of the Middle Egyptian dialects, so that it is tempting to suggest that this manuscript may come from the Faiyum, like those of the ‘Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library’ (PCM I 21–9), with similar, albeit more marked, dialectal traits (see pp. 261–262); compare also the writing of δεινα δεινα (“NN”) as ⲈⲈ, found also in PCM I 27 front l. 9, which is part of the Library.

1–6. Bilabel/Grohmann treat this as two separate texts, not recognising that the two fragments represent the beginning and end of the same lines; they number these lines as verso ll. 20–25, and verso ll. 48–52.

2, 18. ἡ[ο]γαροογ : “a...” The meaning of this word is unclear; ^sαγο (“treasury, storehouse”), ^bαγο (“dwelling, abode”), and ^sεροογ (“cows”) are all possibilities, but none would seem to fit the context.

7. ογζρμε εκ[μογ ια]βε γαρ ος : “a woman, to put [pus] under her” This recipe seems consist of one or more curse procedures. The title in l. 7 apparently describes causing a woman to leak pus from her vulva; cf. the parallel phrase in l. 21 below. For [μογ ια]βε as pus, cf. μοογ ἡαβι (Crum CD 76b). The phrase “under her” recalls the common description of uterine bleeding as blood being “under (a woman)”; for this phrase and similar curses to make a woman experience uterine bleeding, see the notes to PCM I 3 front col. 1 ll. 1–34.

10. γιδωζ : “upon her” Or “upon it”.

18, 24. εμοστε : “hatred” In Coptic magical texts, “hatred” usually refers to a quality of “hatefulness” brought upon a curse’s target, either to separate them from a particular individual, or to make them generally socially unpopular, the inverse to the quality of “favour” (χαρις) which granted social success. Compare PCM I 22 front ll. 27–50; PCM I 31 front 1–40, back ll. 1–20; PCM I 37 back ll. 18–20; Cairo JdE 42573 (Chassinat 1955; KYP M44) p. 4 ll. 1–2, ll. 11–17; O.Monts.Roca inv. no. 1472 (Martín Hernández/Torallas Tovar 2014a; KYP M22); O.Bélanger Sarrazin (Bélanger Sarrazin 2017b; KYP M502).

21. ογζρμε κα μογ ιαβε γαρ ος : “A woman, to put pus under her” See the note to l. 7. Bilabel/Grohmann translate “a woman – pour (lit. lay) pus water (?) on her” (“Eine Frau – gieße (wtl. lege) Eiterwasser auf sie”).

22. νκα ζωφ εχιν ογ:αρων : “from its head upon a lentil?” Bilabel/Grohmann translate “behind him upon a lentil” (“hinter ihn auf eine Linse”).

23. πε θα : “...” Bilabel/Grohmann translate “dignified” (“würdiger”).

24. ογνος εμοστε : “a great hatred” It is tempting to consider, as Bilabel/Grohmann do, this to be part of the previous recipe, but it would seem to be a title, so here we take it as beginning a new text, with the horizontal stroke separating title and recipe rather than two recipes.

25. τακος : “destroy it” Or “destroy her.”

2. Front col. 1 ll. 13–15: Solomonic prescription to heal swelling (KYP T1245)

Incomplete paper sheet; the top and side margins are preserved, but the lower margin is lost to a break along a fold; it is likely that at least half the original height is missing. The manuscript is a formulary containing three surviving healing recipes written in black ink on the front, two of which are completely preserved and one incomplete at the very bottom. The lost lower part of the manuscript likely contained further prescriptions which are now lost. The back is written at 90° to the front and preserves a few letters. Although it is a formulary, it was folded into a small package, 1 horizontal and 6 vertical creases are clearly visible. Based on the acquisition number, the manuscript was likely bought in Egypt between 1957 and 1958 and now belongs to the Papyrus collection of Cologne.¹

A single hand (m¹) seems to be responsible for all of the text on the front; a second, different hand (m²), may be responsible for the brief text on the back, which shows distinct letterforms. The principal copyist nonetheless makes use of two different styles: the upper parts of the manuscript are written in larger, more upright letters with a thicker implement, showing variation in shading; the lower parts are written in a smaller, more sloping script with more ligatures and little variation in shading. Both styles are right-sloping, bimodular, bilinear majuscules, with consistent decorative serifs on the left stroke of the τ, and the upper left part of the oblique strokes on Δ and λ, among others. The μ is rather flat, but not completely so. σ has a distinctive form, with the body being drawn counterclockwise and the ascender rising from its lower side, as in several other manuscripts from the Faiyum (cf. p. 260–261); the ascender is long and curved, resembling that of PCM I 28. The use of paper indicates a tenth century date at the earliest; Schenke (2017: 253 n. 2) proposes a tenth or eleventh century dating by comparison with the hands presented by Stegemann (1936: plates 19 & 21). This dating is certainly correct; similar hands can be seen in the Teshlot Archive, in particular P. Teshlot 1, dated to 1032 CE (Richter 2000), as well as the colophon of BL Or. 7033 (CLM 194) fol. 59v, dated to 981 CE.

The recipes are separated by vertical and horizontal lines, creating sections of different sizes based on the shape of the texts. The first prescription, against uterine bleeding, is written in the left side of the sheet and its 13 lines are completely preserved. The second, a recipe for treating swelling, is incomplete, with only 3 lines preserved. The third recipe, for a crying child, is located on the right side and consists of 10 complete lines.

The manuscript is written in a form of Sahidic, with a few non-standard features: me for ṣmē, and h for ṣe (e.g., ḡhλπε for ṣḡελπε, col. 1 l. 2; hp for ṣp̄, col. 2 l. 3), and e for where Sahidic would use supralineation (e.g., εppo for ṣp̄po, col. 1 ll. 13–14). While the last of these is common in non-standard Sahidic, the first two are indicative of influence from one of the Middle Egyptian dialects (Faiyumic, Mesokemic, Hermopolitan),² suggesting an origin in the Faiyum or somewhere in Middle Egypt.

3. ἡσθαλ : “she will be healed?” The act of “gathering/containing” (ωλ) usually refers in recipes of this type to the act of gathering blood back into the body, but the subject here is feminine, so it cannot refer to the blood; here we propose that this is an error for λο “to heal”, giving the translation “she will quickly be healed”, but it is possible that the use of ωλ in similar texts conditioned this error. For other recipes against uterine bleeding in Coptic, see PCM I 2 l. 1 and the accompanying notes.

11. ἀμαρτε : “restrain” Schenke translates “powers” (“Kräfte”).

13–15. This recipe takes a dialogue form clearly modelled on the Testament of Solomon; cf. the discussion in the introduction to PCMI 30.

2. σαο: “child?” Crum CD 384a gives the meaning of this word as “great scribe, official, craftsman”, but the parallels for the patient in recipes to prevent crying cited in Schenke 2017: 257–258—as well as those in Mich.Ms. 136 (Zellmann-Rohrer/Love 2022; KYP M128) p. 13 ll. 5–6: “a little child” (ογκοῦ ἡρεκε) and BKU I 26 p. 4 l. 12: “a small child” (οὔμρε κοῦ)—demonstrate that the meaning “small child” would be expected here. This meaning is also suggested by the apparent use of κοῦ σαο as the equivalent of ὥμρε in the funerary stela published by Delattre 2008: 149 (ll. 11–12, 17). For a more detailed discussion of the problem, see Garel 2019: 64–65, 67. For a brief discussion of recipes for crying children, cf. the notes to PCM I 33, front l. 6.

Ⲯϥⲛ: “...” Schenke proposes to read the beginning of ⲥⲟⲛ ⲙⲉⲛ “with God”, a common phrase used to open documents following the Arab conquest; it seems to be the equivalent of (and a calque of) the Arabic “in the name of God” (بسم الله bi-smi llāh; Cromwell 2022: 359–360 & 2023: 233–234). While this proposal would seem to be the best interpretation, the absence of the ⲉ (usually written above the ⲛ as an abbreviation for ⲙⲉⲛ) and the lack of context lead us to leave this untranslated.

A complete parchment sheet, damaged along the folds; 1 vertical and approximately 17 horizontal creases are visible. The sheet is a palimpsest; a single column of the underlying literary text, written in a Biblical majuscule, is clearly visible on the back, albeit less so on the front.¹ The presence of at least one ⲧ indicates that the underlying text was written in Bohairic. The later magical text is written on both sides, with the back at 180° to the front, but apparently in the same hand. The ink, likely plant-based,² is a faded brown in colour, making some passages very difficult to read, in particular on the lower half of the back. The parchment is very fine, making it difficult to determine with certainty which side is hair and which flesh, but the darker colour of the back leads us to suggest that this is the hair side.

The manuscript was acquired by the Leiden National Museum from Mr. J. Möger of Soestdijk, the Netherlands, in April 1964 as part of a lot of sixteen

(primarily) Coptic manuscripts.³ Of the sixteen, ten have been published and well-studied, and form an archive of Coptic and Arabic letters and legal documents relating to a man named Raphaël, son of the Deacon Mina, dating to 1022–1063 CE.⁴ Raphaël lived in Middle Egypt, first in Bawit and later in Teshlot, leading to the group being as known the Teshlot Archive. The other five manuscripts from the sale, to date unpublished, are literary in nature: a Sahidic fragment containing short passages with Biblical reminiscences;⁵ an Arabic-Bohairic Coptic liturgical manuscript;⁶ a series of extracts from the Psalms;⁷ and a leaf from a two-column literary codex used as a palimpsest to write another text in a less formal hand.⁸ As discussed further below, it is possible that these manuscripts have some relationship to the magical text beyond their common purchase.

On the front of the magical text, the sheet contains a single recipe to attract a woman, while the back preserves a title and 12 brief prescriptions for favour, separation, love spells, and curses, aimed both at people and property (a furnace). The front contains a large image tableau at the top, and a smaller one consisting primarily of kharaktēres at the bottom, while the lower part of the back contains two lines of linear kufic. The copyist uses enlarged initial letters set in ekthesis for l. 10 of the front and back, and the beginning of each subsequent recipe; the capital omicrons on the back are decorated with internal circles.

The text is written in a right sloping majuscule with regular serifs on λ, τ, γ, x, q; letters such as p, γ, φ, ω, ρ have long descenders. μ is the ‘flat’ μ which emerges in the tenth century.⁹ σ often has a long, curved ascender, similar to that of PCM I 28. Supralinear strokes are consistently drawn above magical names, and the dipunct is regularly used for punctuation (including between magical names). The numerals two (ϐ) and twenty (κ) take their miniscule forms (front l. 15, back l. 18) although this is not true of the other numerals. Two oblique strokes are used to mark the ends of recipes on the back. The tail of the ρ descends beyond the notional lower line. Within this volume, the hand is comparable to those of the second scribe of the Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library (PCM I 27 & 28), as well as to PCM I 32, which also use miniscule letterforms for numerals (κ̄α front l.

⁴ We are very grateful to Vincent Walter for suggesting a possible connection to the Teshlot Archive. For the core group, see Richter 2003 (P. Teshlot), as well as the older treatments in Green 1983; MacCoull 1989. Further texts from the Teshlot Archive are published in PKöln XI 466 and PKöln ägypt. II 64, and Thung 1996.

Broadly similar hands can be seen in the colophons of BnF Copte 129.14 fol. 95v and BnF Copte 131.5 fol. 28v, dated to 1002–1003 and ca. 1091 CE respectively.¹⁰ Green suggested a more precise eleventh century date,¹¹ and in support of this we may note that the hand of PCM I 37 shows similarities with other manuscripts from the 1964 purchase, in particular P.Teschlot 7 & 8, both written by Iōsaphat, son of the Deacon Pisrael, in 1062 CE, as well as the unpublished and undated literary text Leiden F 1964/4.9. The letterforms are very close without being identical: Δ, κ, λ, τ, χ, Ϸ are notably similar across the four manuscripts, while γ, ϣ, and ϡ are markedly different in PCM I 37. We thus suggest an eleventh century date for this manuscript, even if the late tenth century cannot be entirely excluded.

The dialect is a highly standard Sahidic. The only non-standard features are the common interchange of q and ʁ, the use of ɛ for the schwa, normally indicated by a supralinear stroke in the literary dialect, and a few surprising forms, such as ϣϣϣ for ^sϣice? (front l. 22), τϣϣϣ for ^sε-τϣεϣ-ϣϣϣ (back l. 13), and ϣϣ for ^sϣnoq (back l. 6); these last two features would point to an origin in the Faiyum or Middle Egypt.¹² As with the other texts from the tenth and eleventh centuries in this volume, there are many Arabic loanwords, not all of which have been convincingly identified. Once again, these features—standard Sahidic with Middle Egyptian vocalism and Arabic loanwords—are present in the manuscripts from the Teshlot Archive.¹³ For these reasons, it seems very likely that this manuscript also originated in Middle Egypt, perhaps in the region of Bawit or Teshlot. It is tempting to imagine that this manuscript, like the documentary texts, once belonged to the archive of Raphaël, son of Mina, but more work on all of the manuscripts from the 1964 sale will be necessary to determine whether a relationship between them all can be reconstructed, and the exact nature of any relationship.

Green begins numbering the recto from our l. 10, which thus corresponds to l. 1 in his edition. Our ll. 1, 25–32 are not assigned line numbers in Green's edition, while ll. 2–9 correspond to his ll. 24–31. Our ll. 33–35 correspond to his ll. 32–34. Green's line numbers are indicated to the right of the column in grey.

Image: Images with facing figures in Coptic magical texts are associated with love spells, as opposed to those in which they are depicted back to back, which are associated with separation spells (cf. the notes to the images of PCM I 31). The two facing bird-like figures may represent the two targets of the spell, who are made to face one another by the practitioner or invoked being, represented by the front-facing figure in the middle; this depiction would parallel rituals involving the manipulation of effigies, which may be artificial (clay, wax, and so on), or else in the form of animal bodies (Dosoo 2018: 25 et passim; cf. Dosoo 2023a: 164). The image was probably to be copied onto a bone using a mixture of saffron (or sukk, cf. PCM I 24 l. 18) and wine as ink, and placed at the target’s door (ll. 2–6). Green 1987: 30 suggests that the two bird-like figures are female, and the central figure male, but acknowledges that he has no “concrete evidence” for this. He suggests that the three figures are labelled (left-to-right) in Arabic “the magician”, “the magic”, and “the fever”, but these proposals seem phonologically unlikely (cf. Richter 2017a: 518).

3. εϣϣ : “on a bone” Here and elsewhere (back ll. 2, 6, 9, 16, 24), Green understands εϣϣ and its abbreviations as writings of the Greek εϣή “prayer”, but the syntax of the passages in this manuscript regarding writing lead us to expect the writing surface here, preceded by the preposition ε-, cf. back ll. 3, 4, 7, 11, 13. The form ϣϣ for ϣϣ is unexpected, but might be explained as a hypercorrection by a speaker of a ϣϣ/ρϣ dialect (likely a form of Faiyumic) writing in Sahidic, or as a result of a confusion with ϣϣ “corpse”. For bones in Coptic magic, cf. Dosoo 2021e.

10–11. πϣϣ ϣϣ : This initial sequence is difficult to understand; Green translates “the desire for the destruction of a hatred. Also, the desire for a destruction of a... the desire for destruction of a sickness”, but this does not match the surviving traces. “Desire” as a heading would make sense (cf. back l. 9), but repetition of this type is unexpected in such a heading. Perhaps understand, e.g., “the desire of three scourges” (πϣϣ ϣϣ ϣϣ), but this would leave much unexplained.

14. ϣϣϣ ϣϣ ϣϣ : “the staff of fire” For the form of ϣϣ here, cf. ϣϣ in P.Berol. 8503 (Beltz 1894: no. III 23; KYP M495) l. 57. Compare the “staff of fire” (ρϣϣ ϣϣ) possessed by a being invoked in l. 11 of the unpublished curse P.CtYBR inv. 846 (KYP M371).

15. ϣϣϣ : “decans” The “decans” were originally thirty-six asterisms each representing 10° of the ecliptic; compare the signs of the zodiac, each representing 30°. As stars, they were associated in astrology with the concept of fate, and in Christian literature come to be seen as demonic beings often associated with death; cf. Gundel 1936; Dosoo 2022a: 152–156.

22. ϣϣ ϣϣ : “burning desire”: For the motif of LOVE IS FIRE, see the notes to PCM I 3 front col. 2 ll. 33–38.

35. μαλμογσαρρη : “tested” As Green (1987: 37) notes, this is the Arabic المجرّب (al-muḡarrib); cf. back l. 28; the same word is used of a love spell in Cairo JdE 42573 (Chassinat 1955; KYP M44) p. 4 l. 6. For such statements in Greek and Demotic (e.g., GEMF 57/PGM IV.3007: δόκιμον; GEMF 16/PDM xiv.115: iw=f dnt) cf. Dosoo 2014: 343–344. For Judaeo-Arabic and Hebrew examples, cf. MTKG III no. 57 1b l. 5 (likewise מגרר muḡarrib), and the discussion in MTKG I: 146–147.

back 1. ασογχαρε : “...” Green (1987: 37) proposes الساحر (as-sāhir), translating “bewitching”, but the writing of ح as x is unlikely (cf. Richter 2017a: 518). The initial αc- does suggest an Arabic loanword. The word resembles Coptic writings of the word “sugar” السكر as-sukkar; cf. Richter 2017a: 520, 525), but this would not make sense in context; perhaps understand suḡr “intoxication”, with the extended sense of “enchantment” (Lane 1863: 1391a s.v. سُكْرٌ).

4. νερωτε νοιτρε ντοογ : “with milk of a desert citron” The citron, also ‘cedrate’, or ‘sweet lime’ (Citrus medica L.) is a large, bitter, citrus fruit, known in Greek as κίτρον and in Arabic as ترنج (turung). References to plant “milk” are known in other Coptic texts, and likely refer simply to the juice. Cf. PCM I 25 p. 9 l. 3; Macomber 2020: I 132; Lev/Amar 2008: 147–149; Till 1951: 76, 104.

7. νελχα ντοογτ : “of ⟨a⟩ male elsai” As Green (1987: 37) notes, this must be some kind of animal; the initial ελ- might suggest an Arabic loanword, although the /l/ would be expected to assimilate to the following /s/. Perhaps understand a word related to ειογλ (“deer”); for the use of deer (in particular its skin) in Greek magic, see Delatte 1927: 447.6, 483.14, 493.2, 552.1, 13, 553.11 etc.

8. ἰσογρε : “Soures” Green (1987: 39) suggests again a word related to السحر (as-sihr; “magic”), hence “enchanted (water)”, or alternatively a derivation from σύρειν, thus “flowing water”, but neither is close to the expected form. Perhaps understand the personal name Sourēs (σογρης), from Latin Severus, the name of one or more saints venerated in Middle Egypt (Papaconstantinou 2001: 205–206 s.v. Σουροῦς; Suciu 2017b: 147–48); “water of Soures” might therefore be blessed water from a shrine of the saint.

9. νσαναε : “left” Green reads “namely, from (an) ox” (i.e., ⁸νσι ν-ογ-εε), but more plausible is a form of σαναε, whose basic meaning is “maimed” (Crum CD 824a), but cf. British Library MS Or. 6794 l. 8 (Kropp 1931: I no. E; KYP M306/T361) in which it clearly means “left”: “he with the golden bell in his right hand, the spirit lute in his left hand” (πετρε πεακλκλ ννογ εἰν τεφειχ νογναι ερετκιοαρα νππᾱ εἰν τεφειχ νσαναε; cf. Vycichl DELC 343a). A reconciliation spell in Cairo JdE 42573 p. 2 ll. 1–5 (Chassinat 1955; KYP M44) uses the blood of the right ear of a cow.

13. ΝΧΑΡΤΗΣ : “papyrus sheet” Green translates χάρτης as papyrus plant. If it does indeed refer to papyrus, it should be understood as a papyrus sheet used as a writing surface (cf. Lewis 1974: 70–74). Given the late date of the manuscript however, we might perhaps understand a more generic sense of a sheet of writing material, made of either paper or parchment; cf. LBG s.v. χαρτί(v); Richter 2023: 165.

24–32. The text in these lines is significantly smaller than that above, and may have been added later, in the gaps between the linear kufic.

Glossary

Abra see Abrasax

Abrasax

The name Abrasax and its variants (Abra, Abrasaxael, Abraxas, Abrazakh, perhaps also Abrax, Atrakh, Ax) was likely produced through Greek isopsephy, with the letters of the name Αβρασαξ (1 + 2 + 100 + 1 + 200 + 1 + 60) adding up to 365, the number of days in the solar year. The number of letters, seven, was also a significant one in the ancient Mediterranean, equalling, for example, the number of planets (cf. Barb 1957). In the corpus of Graeco-Egyptian magical papyri, it appears as a name associated at times with the supreme solar deity, at others with the Jewish deity *Iao (see, e.g., GEMF 11/PGM LXIX.1, 2 (II CE); GEMF 15.254–257/PGM XII.205–206 (II CE); GEMF 18.195/PGM LXI.33 (III CE)), although we equally find him in the company of the Jewish angels *Michael and *Gabriel (e.g., GEMF 31/PGM I.302 (III CE); KYP M154/PGM III.150). Abrasax appears in several of the Sethian ‘Gnostic’ treatises of the Nag Hammadi Library (Piwowarczyk 2021: 9–10), albeit not with a systematic role, and is mentioned by Irenaeus of Lyons (II CE) and the other heresiologists dependent on him, as the ruler of the three hundred and sixty-five heavens within the Gnostic system of Basilides (Piwowarczyk 2021: 10). Within Jewish and Christian magical texts, Abrasax appears as the, or an, angel of the sun, or, less often, as one of the names of God, with the name borrowed from Graeco-Egyptian sources (Bohak 2008: 247–250; Dosoo 2021d: 416). Note that Abrasax is often associated with the ‘anguipede’, a figure with snake legs, and usually a rooster’s head, whip, and shield, depicted on many magical gems. This association is mistaken; both the figure of the anguipede and the name ‘Abrasax’ are independently associated with Iao, one of the names of the Jewish God, and so when the name ‘Abrasax’ appears with the image of the anguipede it is probably due to their mutual association with Iao, rather than because of a meaningful independent connection (Bonner 1950: 133–134; Shandruk 2022: 105–106).

Abyss

In Coptic literature, the “abyss” (Coptic ⲛⲟⲩⲛ noun, often translating the Greek ἄβυσσος, abussos), is associated both with the depths of the earth (that is, *hell) and the primordial waters which lie below the earth. In biblical contexts, the Greek word designates “a bottomless place” (Lambert 1916). In the Septuagint, it is used to translate to the Hebrew תְּהוֹם (təhôm), referring to the primordial waters which covered the earth before creation and which were subsequently shut up in subterranean storehouses. Augustine, for instance, understands ‘abyss’ as a term for primordial deep waters, associated with caves as the source of all water, in which serpents (Greek δράκοντες) live (Expositions on Psalms, 148.9). The Devil, likewise described as a serpent, is said to have been cast bound into the abyss for a thousand years (Revelation 20.1–3), and this association of the abyss or hell as the dwelling place or prison of fallen angels is found in other texts (e.g., T.Varie. 13 (KYP M107) front ll. 26–27). In the Coptic magical texts, the abyss often occurs in association with cosmic beings whose head is in heaven and whose feet are in the abyss, understood as being beneath the earth (cf. PCM I 8 front ll. 12–3; see Dosoo 2022c: 502). The four pillars of the abyss are said to support the first heaven (PCM I 12 p. 43 ll. 1–3), and God, called in this passage Thrakai, is said to have covered the abyss with the earth and suspended heaven like a vault (PCM I 12 p. 11 ll. 13–15; cf. Genesis 1.7).

Agarwood

Agarwood or aloes (Coptic αλογθ, from Arabic العود al-‘ūd, Greek ἀγάλογον agalokhon) is the wood of aquilaria trees (Aquilaria sp.), which secrete an oleo-resin in response to parasitic infection, making the infected parts of the wood highly aromatic. It was generally imported to Egypt from eastern India and other parts of Southeast Asia, such as Cambodia and Indochina, and should be distinguished from Greek ἄλoη (aloē), bitter aloes (Aloe sp.). Agarwood was known to Dioscorides (Materia Medica I.22) in the first century CE, who describes it as “fragrant” (εὐώδης), but it seems only to have become commonly imported into the Mediterranean after the Islamic conquests. Agarwood is regularly found as an element of offerings in Coptic magical texts; see, for example, PCM I 22 l. 11; PCM I 24 l. 18; PCM I 25 p. 16 l. 14, p. 17 l. 16; PCM I 26 p. 15 l. 31, p. 16 l. 23, p. 17 ll. 9, 23; PCM I 28 p. 12 l. 19; PCM I 32 p. 1 l. 26; PCM 37 back ll. 3, 10; P. Angelic Beings

Angels are omnipresent in Christian literature and cult, as well as in magical texts, in which they serve as agents of higher powers, usually the Jewish-Christian God. As Mihálykó (2022: 725) points out, in early liturgical prayers from Egypt, the congregation asked God for protection through “angelic powers”, or to appoint an angel as a guide. Angels were also believed to appear at the altar during the service, although, as incorporeal heavenly beings, they were not visible to the congregation (Mihálykó 2022: 725; Müller 1962: 77).

Angels were often divided into multiple ranks, including cherubim (χερουβим), seraphim (σεραφим), powers (δυναμис, δυνατος, or δον), thrones (θρονος), principalities (αρχη), and authorities (εξουσια) (cf. Dosoo 2021d: 407). The best-known of such systems is found in Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite’s On the Celestial Hierarchy (6.7), but we find similar lists in other authors, such as Cyril of Alexandria (On the Mysteries 5.6; V CE). The seven archangels are often understood to be the highest rank, who directly serve and stand in the presence of God; only three are named in the canonical books of the Bible: Michael (in Daniel 10.13, 10.21, 12.1; Jude 9.1; Revelation 12.7–12), Gabriel (in Daniel 8.16, 9.21; Luke 1.19, 26), and Raphael (in Tobit 3.17 etc.). We find a full list of seven archangels in 1 Enoch 20: Suriel (or Uriel), Raphael, Raguel, Michael, Sarakael, Gabriel, and Remiel (Isaac in Charlesworth 1983: 23–24). The names in the Coptic magical papyri are inconsistent, but those of the angels from the Bible, including 1 Enoch, tend to recur (cf. Dosoo 2021d: 414–415). For the names of the archangels, cf. the notes to PCM I 11 p. 9 ll. 12–24.

Michael is generally understood as the most foremost of the archangels, the general of the angelic armies who took over the rank of the Devil after his fall (Müller 1959: 8–35).

Seraphim and cherubim in the Egyptian tradition are understood as high-ranking six-winged angels who stand in the presence of God, and recite the *Sanctus before him. The chariot-throne of God is understood as being drawn by the Four Living Creatures (πτοογ ἡζων): four cherubim (or two cherubim and two seraphim) with human, lion, ox, and eagle faces (Müller 1959: 83–84; Stevenson 2001; de Grooth/van Moorsel 1977–1978; cf. Ezekiel 1; Revelation 4.6–8), and are associated with two sets of names—the first a palindromic square αλφα ληων φωνη ανηρ, the second variants of μελιτων, αγραμματα, παραμυρα, σουρογιοιον (Tsakos 2014; Dosoo 2022c: 522–523). The tradition of associating the Four Living Creatures with the Four Evangelists, common in the Latin West (cf. Stevenson 2001: 474–486), is less prominent, but not unattested in Coptic texts; see e.g., Pseudo-John Chrysostom, On the Four Bodiless Living Creatures (CC 177). The Four Living Creatures, and sometimes other angels, are sometimes described as “bodiless” or “incorporeal” (ασωματος).

Aswan Dish

“Aswan dish” translates Coptic ⲙⲟⲩⲧⲧⲉⲗⲓⲟⲛ/ⲡⲓⲛⲁⲗ ⲛⲥⲟⲩⲁⲛ and variants thereof, the former from the Greek σκουτέλλιον (in turn from Latin scutella; cf. Förster WBGW 739), the latter from the Greek πίναξ. This term seems to be equivalent to the Arabic ṣahfa (صحفة; cf. P.Bad. V 123 front l. 1, back 17 (KYP M315); Scala Magna 2.6, 1255 s.v. ⲃⲓⲛⲁⲗ (Macomber 2020: I 106)). In modern Egypt this refers to a broad dish of ca. 30 cm in diameter with raised edges (van der Vliet 1991: 224–225). An example of an object labelled an “Aswan dish” (ⲡⲓⲛⲁⲗ ⲛⲥⲟⲩⲁⲛ) can be found in the British Museum under inventory no. EA 27718 (TM 82637). Although fragmentary, it would seem to be a very similar object to the modern ṣahfa. “Aswan” here refers to the place of manufacture. It seems that the pottery was usually red, but we also find reference to “white” dishes (PCM I p. 1 l. 19; PCM I 37 back ll. 11–12) and even “glass dishes” (PCM I 21 p. 17 ll. 26–30). In Coptic magical papyri, dishes are usually used as supports to copy texts and images, which may be washed off during rituals; see PCM I 30 front ll. 2–3, PCM I 31 back l. 16; PCM I 32 p. 1 l. 19; PCM I 37 back ll. 11–12.

Binding and Releasing

The concept of binding (ⲙⲟⲩⲣ mour) and releasing (ⲃⲟⲗ ⲉⲃⲟⲗ bōl ebol) is at the centre of many Coptic magical texts. “Binding” translates Greek terms such as καταδέω (“I bind”), and the concept appears frequently in binding curses and love spells, and relates to binding an individual through a curse so that they are unable to act in specific ways—speaking against someone, or having sexual intercourse, for example. The act of unbinding (ⲃⲟⲗ ⲉⲃⲟⲗ, translating Greek λύω) refers to rituals to undo such binding procedures (cf. Eidinow 2007: 142–152; Dosoo 2020: 267–272). ⲙⲟⲩⲣ is used in a second, unrelated sense, to refer to the act of binding an amulet to the body, equivalent to the Greek περιάπτω.

Copto-Arabic

“Copto-Arabic” generally refers to Arabic-language texts produced by Copts, the indigenous Christian community of Egypt. Some of these are translations of older Coptic-language texts, others are original compositions; cf. Swanson 2014.

Costus

Costus (Coptic ⲕⲟⲩⲱⲧⲧ koušt, Greek κόστος kostos, Arabic قسط qust) is a term used to refer to two different plants, Dolomiaea (or Saussurea) costus (Falc.) and Hellenia speciosa (J. Koenig, formerly Cheilocostus speciosus or Costus speciosus). Although authors do not clearly or consistently distinguish between the two, the original referent was probably to the former, referred to as kuṣṭha- in Sanskrit, whence the names in the other languages derive. The former grows in the mountainous far north of India, while the latter is found in both northern India (including modern Pakistan) and the Near East, leading to them being at times referred to as, respectively, “Indian” and “Arabian” costus, the former being black and the latter white (e.g., Dioscorides, Materia Medica 1.16). Both are used primarily for their root, although an oil may be extracted from the Indian variety. Costus was already being imported into the Mediterranean area in the fourth century BCE (see, e.g., Theophrastus, Enquiry into Plants 9.7), and its medical use is attested in Greek, Coptic, Jewish, and Arabic texts from antiquity to the Middle Ages. Dioscorides (Materia Medica 1.16) describes the Arabian costus as being the best, with a pleasant (ἡδεῖα) smell. Other Greek and Latin sources consider it as dry, pungent, heating, and bitter. In the magical papyri it is used in burnt offerings, although it is usually unclear which plant it refers to. Since we sometimes find instructions to use white costus (ⲕⲟⲩⲱⲧⲧ ⲛⲁⲗⲁⲅ koušt n-alau, e.g., PCMI 26 p. 16 l. 12 cf. l. 8), likely the Arabian costus, it may be that koušt on its own refers to Indian costus, although further work is needed on this point. Costus is found occasionally in the Graeco-Egyptian magical papyri (e.g., GEMF 16/PDM xiv.336 (?) (KYP M162); GEMF 57/PGM IV.2680; GEMF 60/PGM XIII.18, 353 (KYP M161)). For Coptic examples, see PCMI 17 ll. 11, 27; PCMI 26 p. 15 l. 31, p. 16 ll. 8, 12; PCMI 29 back l. 7; PCMI 37 l. 6; *P.Ryl. Cup

The word ‘cup’ (Coptic ⲁⲡⲟⲧ apot) is the equivalent of the Greek ποτήριον (potērion), referring to a small drinking vessel. The same term is used for the liturgical chalice used for the wine which becomes the blood of Christ during the anaphora (the Eucharistic prayer), as part of the epiclesis, when the priest asks

God to fill the wine in the chalice with the Holy Spirit (Mihálykó 2019: 61). In the context of curses and love spells, it can be used to refer to a “potion”, which may have a negative effect on the one who drinks it; see, for example PCM 10 ll. 16–17, in which a woman might be barren because “someone has given her an enchanted cup”; PCM I 26, recipe number 7, for a man “who has been given a cup”; PCM I 33 front ll. 1–5. In magical rituals, cups may be used to contain various liquids, such as water, oil, wine, and blood. Often, an invocation was to be spoken over the liquid, following the pattern of the epiclesis in the anaphora (see PCM I 6 ll. 15–18; PCM I 10 l. 10; PCM I 17 ll. 21–22; cf. Dosoo 2021b: 76–77).

First Fruits (wine or oil of the)

The “first fruits” (Greek/Coptic ἀπαρχή/ἀπαρχή aparkhē, translating Hebrew ראשית rē šît) are the first products of the harvest. Numbers 18.12 specifies that the Israelites are to dedicate the first fruits of oil, wine, and grain to the priestly tribe, the Levites, and in early Christianity this prerogative was understood to have been transferred to the Christian clergy. Canonical collections from around the fourth century onwards specify that the first fruit offerings were to be taken to the church and blessed by the bishop to serve three purposes—first, the production of the bread and wine used in the communion, second, the maintenance of the clerics, and finally, the remainder was to be used for the care of the sick and poor (Wipszycka 1972: 70–71; Madey/Amatowni 1982: 13–14, 18–19; Wipszycka 2009: 559–561; Arabic Canons of Athanasius §§63–65, 82, 107 in Riedel/Crum 1904; Bohairic Apostolic Constitutions §§54, 74 in Tattam 1848).

In Coptic, the word aparkhē came to refer specifically to the wine used for communion, with the word being transliterated into Arabic as أبركة abārka (Worrell 1942: 329; Burmester 1967: 82; Madey/Amatowni 1982: 18–19; Macomber 2020: I 91, 174).

Coptic magical texts regularly make use of wine and oil of the first fruits ((ἀπ)αρχή νῆρη, (ἀπ)αρχή νῆεζ), likely referring to wine and oil from the first fruit offering which had been blessed by the bishop and which could therefore serve as liturgical wine and oil. Aparkhē is usually abbreviated to arkhē in the corpus, but we should probably understand this as being the same word (cf. Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: 96–97, 101). The long form is best attested in the Michigan manuscripts (KYP M9 & 15) edited by Worrell (1930: 246.11, 13; 248.15; 249.9). In one text we find both forms, the longer (and more “correct”) form in the spoken formula, and the shorter (‘abbreviated’) form in the ritual instructions (BM EA 10391 front ll. 35, 37; Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 1; KYP M302). The shorter form also appears as a variant of the full writing in some copies of the Scala Magna (Macomber 2020: II 393).

Since the primary referent of the (ap)arkhē is wine, we translate it as “wine of the first fruits” where it is not specified as being oil. Support for this is found in the instructions for creating an amulet in the Endoxon of Michael in which the Heidelberg copy has arkhē alone (PCM I 26 p. 17 l. 18), but the equivalent instructions in the unpublished Collège de France copy specifies the use of wine (αρχη νηρι, p. 21 ll. 5–6). Note that this means, almost paradoxically, that when the product is specified, oil is more common, since no specification is necessary to refer to wine. In this volume, wine of the first fruits is used in PCM I 21 l. 8; PCM I 24 l. 18; PCM I 25 p. 16 ll. 8, 11; PCM I 26 p. 17 l. 18; PCM I 32 l. 22; PCM I 37 front l. 3, back l. 2 and oil in PCM I 26 p. 16 ll. 7, 13, 24; PCM I 37 back l. 12.

Flask

‘Flask’ in this volume translates the Greek ἀμπύλλη (ampullē; from Latin ampulla), borrowed into Coptic. The Latin term refers to small bottles with rounded bodies and short necks used to store oil, ointment, but also wine; they are often made out of glass (TLL s.v. ampulla). This description would seem to hold true also for the Greek loanword (cf. Remondon 1952: 203). In Coptic texts, the eighth-century monk Frange mentions flasks (ἀμπογλε) in two letters, in one case to be filled with fish sauce (χιρ čir; O.Frange 53.14, 15; O.Bâle inv. Lg Ae BJF 31c ll. 5, 8 (Boud’hors 2011: 105–106); Boud’hors/Heurtel 2015: 71). The Scala Magna (s.v. οὔαμπογλια, Macomber 2020: I 108) defines the ampullē as a جفنة ġafna, referring rather to a large bowl (see Lane 1863: 434 s.v. جَفْنَةٌ, جَفْنٌ نَاقَةٌ). It is possible the word could have both meanings simultaneously, depending on context, or that the meaning had changed by the time of the writing of the Scala in the fourteenth century. In the Coptic magical papyri, the word appears as a container of water or oil in PCM I 26 p. 15 l. 28, p. 16 l. 10; PCM I 37 back ll. 14, 25; British Library MS Or 6796 (2), (3) verso l. 111 (Kropp 1931: I no. H; KYP M118).

Frankincense

Frankincense (Greek/Coptic λίβανος/λιβανος libanos) is the resin of evergreen trees of the genus Boswellia, imported to Egypt from South Arabia and the Horn of Africa. It is found regularly in the Hebrew Bible and New Testament among offerings to the Jewish god (e.g., Leviticus 2.16), and was famously one of the gifts of the magoi to Jesus, along with gold and myrrh (Matthew 2.11). Like *costus and *saffron, it continued to be popular after the Islamic conquests, but became less prestigious with the arrival as newer fragrances such as *agarwood and *musk became more readily available. Frankincense regularly appears as an offering in the Graeco-Egyptian magical papyri (LiDonnici 2001: 68–77), as well as the Coptic examples; see λίβανος in the index for attestations in this volume. As well as being burned as an incense, we regularly find it used for various complaints in Coptic, Arabic, and Jewish medicine.

Hell

“Hell”, Greek ᾗδης (hadēs), Coptic ἀμεντε (amente), refers in popular Egyptian Christianity to the underworld. Prior to the resurrection of Jesus, nearly all the human dead were confined in hell, but after his resurrection, only the evil were kept there, while the righteous were taken to Paradise (παράδεισος paradeisos) to await final judgement. Hell is overseen by angels who punish sinners, whose ruler is known as Temeluchus or Tartaruchus (“ruler of Tartarus”), and is also the place to which the fallen angels, or demons, are confined as punishment. There is often a conflation between the angels of hell and the demons, and thus the ruler of hell and the Devil (Rosenstiehl/Ménard 1986; Zandee 1960: 338–332). The deepest and most terrible part of hell is referred to as Tartarus (Τάρταρος) (Zandee 1960: 317–318). Hell may also be referred to as the *abyss, a term originally referring to the primordial waters below the earth (Zandee 1960: 318–319).

The Coptic term amente derives from the older Egyptian  imn.t.t, literally “western land” (DELC: 11), referring to the other realm of the dead ruled over by *Osiris, but in Christian texts the original signification seems to have been almost entirely lost (cf. Zandee 1960: 305–307, 310–316).

Horkōmotoi

The speech acts of invoking, adjuring, and requesting are often strengthened by the use of authorities (horkōmotoi in Shauf 2005), introduced using the preposition “by” (ὑ). A particularly extensive example is “I adjure you today, by the wellbeing of your names and your powers and your phylacteries and your images and the places in which you dwell and the Trinity” (PCMI 21 ll. 14–19). According to Shauf (2005), these authorities are understood as entities with a special relationship to the addressed being, of such a nature that, when they are called upon, the being cannot refuse the request (cf. Shauf 2005: 203, 214; Dosoo 2022a: 131–132). Common horkōmotoi in Coptic magical texts are the “name” (ἄν), “dwelling place(s)” (ἡ/τοπος ἐτ(Ὶ)ῳοπ νῆντ), “image” (ζῶδιον < ζώδιον), “phylacteries” (φυλακτήριον < φυλακτήριον), “power” (ἰσχυς), and “wellbeing” (οὐχαι). “Image” here seems to refer to the images of superhuman beings which are often found in magical texts, understood as having an ontologically significant relationship to the being which they depict, and “phylacteries” may be the accompanying kharaktēres (Dosoo 2022a: 132). “Wellbeing” refers to the health and fortune of the being, equivalent to Latin salus or Greek σωτήρια, with its use probably deriving from oaths sworn by the ‘wellbeing’ of emperors, found from the sixth century onwards (Dosoo 2022a: 131–132). The wellbeing mentioned as a horkōmotos is usually that of another being than the one addressed.

Iao Sabaoth Adonai Eloei Elemas

Names for the Jewish-Christian deity, drawn from Hebrew and Aramaic. Iao (Ιαω/ιαω) is a Greek rendering of the personal name of the deity, either the Tetragrammaton, ‘four-letter name’ יהוה (YHWH) or the shorter three-letter name יהו (YHW), the latter found in names such as “Elijah” (Hebrew ʿĒlīyāhū; Weippert 1980: 249–250; Vasileiadis 2013: 6–8; Vasileiadis 2015: 68; Vasileiadis 2017: 34–39).

In Egypt, the form Yahō seems to have been commonly in use among the Jewish population of Elephantine from the fifth-century BCE (Weippert 1980: 249; van der Toorn 2019: 102–107), and is likely the form represented by Iao, the most common writing in Greek. Writings in Demotic, Old Coptic, and Latin suggest that this would originally have been pronounced as Yaho, even though the /h/ could not be clearly written in Greek (Vasileiadis 2017: 49 n. 72; GEMF 16/PDM xiv.169 etc.; GEMF 57/PGM IV.92). Other forms attested in Greek suggest that the full Tetragrammaton was pronounced as Yahwe (Weippert 1980: 249; Marjanen 2004), implying that ‘Iao’ may be the three-letter name.

Nonetheless, ‘Iao’ is the usual form in which the name appears in the Greek magical papyri. It is one of, if not the, most common divine names in this corpus, although it is often unclear if it is understood as the name of the specifically Jewish-Christian deity, or rather as another name for a different powerful god (such as the sun god), or simply a powerful word (Fauth 2014: 17–62). In Second Temple and Rabbinic Judaism, speaking of the name was avoided, being replaced with Adonai (“my lord”) in reading the scriptures; this taboo surrounding the name likely increased its sense of power (Skehan 1980; Bohak 2000: 5; Vasileiadis 2015: 57–58).

Early Christian authors show awareness of the pronunciation of the personal name of the Jewish-Christian god as Iao, even if they did not use it extensively (Vasileiadis 2013: 9–13; Vasileiadis 2015: 57–59). It notably appears as a secret name of Jesus in the Coptic apocryphal Book of Bartholomew (CC 27; Westerhoff

Sabaoth (Σαβαώθ) is the Greek rendering of the biblical epithet, “(of) hosts” (חַבְרָוֹת, ṣəḥḇā’ōt), usually found after the Tetragrammaton, with the sequence thus commonly rendered in English translation as “Lord of Hosts”. Unlike the Tetragrammaton, ‘Sabaoth’ was transliterated into Greek, and appears in the Septuagint (e.g., Joshua 15.17) and in the *Sanctus in liturgical texts (e.g., Johnson 2010: 24), so would certainly have been very familiar to most Christians.

Eloei comes from the Aramaic אֱלֹהֵי (elōhāi “my god”), rendered in Mark (15.34) as Ἐλωὶ Elōi in the citation of Psalm 21 (22) 2 “God, my god, listen to me, why have you forsaken me?”

Elemas seems to derive from a reinterpretation of λεμὰ σαβαχθανί (lema sabakhthani), the following part of the citation of Psalm 21.2 (22.2) as given in Matthew 27.46, from Aramaic לָמָּה שְׁבַקְתָּנִי (lāmā šəḇaqtanī “why have you forsaken me”). In the absence of knowledge of Aramaic, it seems likely that the whole sequence was understood by the Christian composers of the magical papyri as part of the name of God (cf. Kropp 1930: III: 128 (§218); Piwowarczyk 2021: 159–182, 241–261).

Examples of these names in sequence can be seen in, for example, PCM I 11 p. 2 ll. 9–10, p. 5 ll. 5–6, p. 16 ll. 14–15; PCM I 12 p. 10, ll. 17–18; PCM I 22 front ll. 11–12; PCM I 26 p. 13 ll. 25–26.

Kufic Ink

As recognised by Richter (2023), the Coptic αλμιτετ παλκωβι (almitet n-alkhōbi, from Arabic المداد الكوفي al-midād al-kūfī), refers to a type of ink known as ‘kufic’, for which recipes are attested in Arabic from the eleventh century CE. It is a type of black carbon ink, produced by the pyrolysis (prolonged heating in the absence of oxygen) of organic matter—including, depending on the recipe, cloth, pomegranate rind, gallnuts, and date seeds—mixed with gum arabic and formed into solid cakes which would be moistened by the scribe when writing (Richter 2023; Levey 1962: 7, 16, 31, 34). The word αλμιτετ (“ink”) also appears, but without the specification ‘kufic’, in P.Vindob. K 11088 (Hevesi 2015; KYP M374) B l. 5).

Mastic

Greek/Coptic μαστίχη/μαστιχη (mastikhē), or σκῖνος/σκινος (skhinos), Arabic مصطكا (maṣṭakā) refers to the resin of the lentisk or mastic tree (Pistacia lentiscus L.), common around the Mediterranean, and, at least in the eleventh century, imported to Egypt from the Greek islands. It seems to be very rare in the Graeco-Egyptian magical papyri; in the Betz PGM and volume 1 of GEMF, we find it only in GEMF 57/PGM IV (KYP M3) ll. 2582, 2648 (as σκῖνος), in descriptions of hypothetical offerings in spoken formula, but not in ritual instructions. In the Coptic corpus, however, it is very common (see the index of Greek words, s.v. μαστίχη). As with many of the items used as offerings, it is also attested in Greek, Coptic, Jewish, and Arabic medicine.

Musk (Incense)

In Coptic the word for “musk” or “musk incense” is usually that derived from the Greek μωσχάτον (moskhaton); as noted by Fournet (2008), the translation of “muscat wine”, originally proposed by Crum, is incorrect. In other texts, we find (ⲁⲗ)ⲙⲓⲥⲕ from the Arabic المسك (al-misk). More rarely we find ⲙⲁⲥⲕⲉ (maskhe), which may be derived from the Greek μόσχος (moskhos), or else represent a miswriting of ⲙⲁⲥⲧⲕⲉ (mastikhe), that is, *mastic. Musk is a pungent substance produced in the scent glands of male musk deer (Moschus moschiferus), found in the Himalayas and Tibet, during the mating season. After extraction it is black in colour and may be sold as a liquid or a solid. The earliest mentions of musk in the Mediterranean region are found in the fourth century, but it did not become widely available until new trade routes to India were set up following the Arab conquests, and so is absent from magical texts from Egypt before the seventh century. Technically moskhaton probably refers to a compound perfume whose primary ingredient is musk, leading us here to translate it as “musk incense”. While commonly used as a component of perfumes, musk was also used in medicine, and in the Coptic magical papyri we find it, usually used in burnt offerings, in PCMI 7 back l. 9; PCMI 22 ll. 13–14; PCMI 25 p. 16 l. 14, p. 17 ll. 17–18; PCMI 26 p. 15 l. 33, p. 16 l. 32; PCMI 28 p. 12 l. 19; PCMI 37 back l. 29; BKU I 26 (KYP M525) l. 8; BM EA 10391 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 1; KYP M302) front l. 57; P.Köln Kopt. 3 back l. 5; P. Myrrh στακτη (from Greek στακτή, both staktē) refers to the liquid form, considered to be of a higher quality. The names σμῆρνης (smērnēs, from Greek σμύρνα smurna) and μωρ (from Arabic مurr murr) are more common in Coptic medical texts (Till 1951: 64). Like frankincense, the plant is native to the Horn of Africa and southern Arabia, and was imported to Egypt and the Mediterranean from pre-Christian times. Dioscorides (Materia medica 1.60, 64) describes myrrh as “bitter” (πικρά), “fragrant” (εὐώδης, in particular staktē), “sharp” (δριμεῖα), and “warming” (θερμαντική). The name in most languages derives from the Semitic root m-r-r, meaning “bitter”, a quality noted in some Greek magical papyri (Klein 1987: 380; cf. LiDonnici 2001: 77). Myrrh in the Jewish Scriptures and New Testament is generally used for anointing (e.g., Exodus 30.23; Luke 7.46), and, along with *frankincense and gold, was one of the gifts of the magoi to the infant Jesus in Matthew 2.11. Like frankincense, myrrh is regularly used in the Graeco-Egyptian magical papyri, with the soot produced by burning it often being used to make ink (LiDonnici 2001: 66–77). As with many other fragrant objects, its use is also attested in Greek, Coptic, Jewish, and Arabic medicine (Till 1951: 78; Lev/Amar 2008: 221–223); cf. Asensi Amorós 2003: 4–7. Pharaonic Deities Between the third and fifth centuries, most traditional Egyptian temple cults ceased to operate (see p. 2), but certain Pharaonic Egyptian deities are continuously mentioned in Coptic magical texts up to the eighth or ninth century (cf. Dosoo/Blumell 2018; Bélanger Sarrazin forthcoming a). Most commonly, the texts contain narrative charms in which the main protagonists are Isis (ἰσε) and her son Horus (χορ). Isis and Horus are both deities with wide ranging associations—Isis is associated with motherhood, queenship, and magic (Griffiths 2001), among other phenomena, and Horus with kingship, the sky, and the sun (Meltzer 2001). In these Coptic texts, however, their most important characteristic is their nature as archetypal mother and son. In Pharaonic narrative charms, Horus is often injured or sick, and Isis must heal him. The Coptic-language charms continue this pattern, with Horus often being afflicted by the burning ‘sickness’ of love.

Coptic ⲙⲁⲗ (šal) refers to the resin of the tree Commiphora myrrha (T. Nees);

Rarer in the Coptic magical papyri are Osiris (οὐσιρι)—the king of the dead, husband of Isis and father of Horus—and Nephthys (νεβωθ)—the sister of Isis and Osiris (Kitchen 2001). In PCM I 9, Nephthys is referred to as cβωθ Sbthō (“Sephthys”) a contraction of the name Isis-Nephthys (σενεβθω, Ἡσενεφθυς). This combined form of the name represents a case in which the two goddesses are assimilated to one another as a result of Nephthys’ primary role as Isis’ companion (Quaegebeur 1991).

In PCM I 4 (p. 4 ll. 12, p. 5 ll. 2, 5) we find three other deities mentioned: Apis (ἁπῆ hape), Petbe (πετβε), and Seth (σῆθ). Apis was the sacred bull who lived in the temple of Ptah at Memphis from the Old Kingdom to the Roman period (Vercoutter 1975; Dodson 2005). Petbe, “the avenger” was a deity (or sometimes, plural deities) worshipped in the Ptolemaic and Roman period as a god of justice, often depicted as a griffin (and more vaguely, as a hybrid monster) (Quaegebeur 1983; Brashear 1991: 24–34; Aufrère 2005). Seth is the brother and killer of Osiris, a god of storms and the desert understood as powerful and lawless, associated in the Greek tradition with the giant Typhon, and often called upon in the Graeco-Egyptian magical corpus (te Velde 1967; Fabre 2001; Cruz–Uribe 2009). Note that within Judaism and Christianity, ‘Seth’ is also the name of an unrelated figure, the third son of Adam and Eve (Genesis 4.25).

NB: Outside the context of horkōmotoi, the word “phylactery” refers simply to an amulet.

Platter

In this volume we use “platter” to translate the Coptic ⲁⲗⲥⲉⲙⲉ (alceme) and variants, from the Arabic الجām al-ġām, following Richter 2016a: 155, who suggests the translation “cup”. While this word can refer to a cup, it seems more often to refer to a tray or platter; see Lane 1863: 490b s.v. جوم; Nasrallah 2017: 581. The word is masculine in Arabic, but apparently treated as feminine in Coptic; this may be because of its plural form, which resembles that of a feminine noun (جامات ġāmāt; we thank Marijn van Putten for this suggestion).

Pot

The Coptic word ⲉⲁⲗⲁⲩⲧ (calaht, Demotic glḥt) refers to a pot or cauldron, usually made out of terracotta and with one or more handles (referred to as “ears” in Coptic), although examples made of bronze and glass, and without handles, are also recorded. The word is used, in both magical and literary contexts to translate the Greek χύτρα (khutra; Crum CD 813b–814a; cf. Łajtar/van der Vliet 2017: no. 9 l. 39), a word with the same meaning. The calaht/khutra was used for cooking both meat and vegetables, being placed directly on the fire so that its bottom became blackened (Richter 2020: 174–175; Bonati 2016: 197–229), but it could also be used for storage and transporting goods, such as bread and pickled fish

(O. Sarga 188.5–6). The Coptic word was borrowed from a Semitic language around the time of the 19th Dynasty (1295–1069 BCE), and is cognate with the Hebrew qallahat (קלחת). This Semitic word was itself a loanword from the older Egyptian word krh.t (“pot”), which survives in Coptic only as καλαχη (kalahē), with the sense of “womb” (Sauneron 1961; CED: 329; DELC: 339–340; Hoch 2014: 331–332; Richter 2020: 174–175; Vitmann 2021: 286). In magical texts, the calaht serves two purposes: first, its blackening on a fire may serve as a metaphor for someone becoming hated (PCM I 22 ll. 35–36: cf. Bernardin 1937: 126.33; Weingarten 2013: 345); secondly, and more commonly, it may serve as a container for liquid to be activated in rituals, often with the addition of other ingredients, and the practitioner speaking a formula over it. For attestations, see σαλαχτ in the glossary, and cf. BL Ms Or. 6795 l. 48 (Kropp 1931: I no. f; KYP 307); BL Ms Or. 6796 (1 verso) ll. 13, 14 (Kropp I 1931: no. Sanctus

The term ‘Sanctus’ or ‘Trishagion’ refers to the modified version of a phrase taken from Isaiah 6:3 which describes how the seraphim, flying around the throne of God, hymn him by singing “Holy, holy, holy, Lord Sabaoth, heaven and earth are full of your glory” (ἅγιος, ἅγιος, ἅγιος, κύριος Σαβαώθ, πλήρης ὁ οὐρανὸς καὶ ἡ γῆ τῆς ἁγίας δόξης σου). In many Christian traditions, including the Orthodox churches, this phrase is part of the anaphora, the Eucharistic prayer, spoken both by the celebrant and the congregation. In Egypt, this passage is usually in Greek, although the repetition by the priest may spoken in Coptic (Mihálykó 2019: 374; de Bruyn 2017: 193). The speaking of this praise in the liturgy was seen as bringing together the faithful and the angelic hosts in the act of worship (de Bruyn 2017: 191). Witnesses of the Sanctus as part of the anaphora from Egypt survive from as early as the fourth century, in the Euchologion of Serapion of Thmuis (Johnson 1995: 46–47) and a book of liturgical prayers now kept in Monserrat (P.Monts. Roca fol. 154b–155a in Roca-Puig 1996); de Bryun 2017: 6.1.2.). The phrase is commonly borrowed in the Coptic magical corpus (cf. Kropp 1930: III 190–242), in which we find it in various genres of texts—most commonly in invocations for healing and protection (PCMI 11 p. 18 l. 27 – p. 19 l. 3; PCMI 12 p. 4, ll. 17–21; PCMI 25 p. 6 ll. 7–9, p. 15 ll. 9–10; PCMI 26, p. 9 ll. 4–6; British Library MS Or 6796 2, 3 (verso)=KYP M118, ll. 38–40), but also in a curse (Bodleian MS. Copt. c (P) 4; Crum 1896 (KYP M412) front ll. 13–14), and in a spell for a good singing voice (BKU I 8 (KYP M81) front ll. 6–7). For the Sanctus in Greek amulets, see de Bruyn 2006: 18–19.

Sator Square

The Sator square is a sequence of names which, when written in a square, form an acrostic which can be read in any direction. Likely Latin in origin, their original form is sator arepo tenet opera rotas, while the standard Greek form is σατωρ αρεπω τενετ οπερα ρωτας. Most of the individual words have a meaning in Latin: sator “sower”, tenet “he holds”, opera “work”, rotas “wheels”. The letters can be rearranged to read pater noster (“our Father”) (cf. Matthew 6.9), leading some to suggest a Christian origin for the square, but the earliest clear attestation is found in an inscription from Pompeii predating the eruption of 79 CE, and thus the sequence may also predate the Christian Lord’s Prayer, which begins with the words “our Father”.

The Sator square is attested several times in the Coptic magical corpus, e.g. P.Vindob K 2435 (Stegemann 1934: no. 48; KYP M276); P.Vindob K 2436 (Stegemann 1934: no. 49; KYP M277); P.Berol. 8096 (Beltz 1984: no. III 17; KYP M210); P.Berol. 982 (Beltz 1985: no. IV 1031; KYP M226); BKU III 387 (KYP M336) ll. 24–28 (in which they are written as kharaktēres).

The sequence also occurs in Coptic magical texts as individual names (e.g. P.Vindob. K 8638 (Stegemann 1934: no. 28; KYP M362)), sometimes as part of longer lists of voces magicae and names (e.g., PCM I 25 p. 16 ll. 23–26), while at other times we find the word Sator standing alone (e.g., P.Ryl.Copt. 105 (KYP M325) l. 1).

In Coptic, the sequence is often written in such a way that it would no longer form a palindrome even if arranged in a square, with, for example, opera written as ωτεπα (a visual confusion of π and τ), or rotas written as ρωΔοc (interchange of unvoiced τ with voiced Δ and of unstressed vowels).

By the eighth century, we have evidence of a tradition common to Nubia and Egypt according to which the Sator names were understood as those of the five nails which pierced Jesus on the cross (e.g., PCM I 25 p. 10 ll. 19–20; PCM I 29 front ll. 15–16; Griffith 1927: no. 25 (KYP M91); EES 39 5B.125/A (Alcock 1982; KYP M280) ll. 3–19). These “five nails” may have been understood as his five wounds—the four nails (one in each hand and foot) and the spear with which he was pierced in the side (John 19.34; cf. Worrell 1909: 169 n. 8; Schiller 1971–1972: II 91), although in PCM I 13 ll. 20–22 the five nails and the spear are mentioned separately. This association of the Sator-names with the nails of Christ is also well-attested in Ethiopian Christianity. As recognised by Basset (1894: 517) the surprising forms that they take in Ethiopian texts—such as Sador Alador Danat Adera Rodas (ሳዶር : አላዶር : ዳናት : አደራ : ሮዳስ : from Griaule 1930: 27)—is partially explicable by the changes already found in Coptic (cf. Worrell 1915: 88–89 n. 7), while a *Copto-Arabic intermediary would explain many of the rest.

Storax

Storax (Coptic ⲥⲧⲣⲁⲗ stēr̄x from Greek στύραξ sturax) is the term used for the resin of the trees Styrax officinalis (L.) and Liquidambar orientalis (Mill.), the latter found in a range from southern Europe to the Levant, the latter in Rhodes and southwest Asia Minor. The first of these produces solid styrax, more expensive and rarer, while the second produces a liquid. It is often described by Greek authors as “heavy” (βαρύ) in scent. Storax is common in the Graeco-Egyptian magical papyri, e.g. GEMF 31/PGM I.285; GEMF 16/PDM xiv.330 (?), 417, 913; GEMF 55/PGM III.23; GEMF 57/PGM IV.1213, 1832, 2460, 2462, 2872; GEMF 60/PGM XIII.17, 353; GEMF 74/PGM VII.434. In the Coptic magical papyri, it is found in PCM I 22 l. 12; PCM I 26 p. 16 ll. 8, 25; PCM I 32 l. 26; PCM I 34 p. 4 l. 17 (?); BL Ms Or. 6796 (1–3) (Kropp 1931: I no. Tabernacle and Veils

In the Hebrew Bible, the term “tabernacle” (Greek/Coptic σκηνή/σκηνή skēnē translating Hebrew מִשְׁכָּן miškān) refers to a large tent which served as the sanctuary of the Jewish god, within which was kept the Ark of the Covenant (Exodus 25–30). Within the tabernacle (as in the later Temple of Solomon and Second Temple), the innermost part, the Holy of Holies, was separated from the rest of the temple, and by extension the outer world, by a curtain or veil (Greek/Coptic καταπέτασμα/καταπετασμα katapetasma translating Hebrew פֹּרֶכֶת pōreket). In the Coptic magical papyri, the term is used in a sense derived from later Judaism and Christianity in which the tabernacle on earth has a counterpart in the heavenly tabernacle (cf., Revelation 15.5), which designates the highest heaven in which God resides. Since the heavenly dwelling place of God was the equivalent of the Holy of Holies, it was likewise understood as being separated from the world by veils, often seven in number, likely inspired by the seven planetary spheres understood to separate earth from the highest heaven in Late Antique cosmological schemes. In this volume, the heavenly tabernacle and its veils are mentioned in PCM I 12 p. 1 ll. 1–2, p. 21 ll. 5–6; PCM I 15 p. 7 l. 21 (?); PCM I 17 front l. 4; PCM I 18 l. 4; PCM I 28 p. 3 ll. 12–14, p. 7 l. 16. Three Evil Things

The term “three evil things” (ⲡⲟⲩⲟⲙⲛⲧ ⲉⲧⲫⲟⲟϥ p-šomnt et-hoou) appears in several ritual prescriptions as part of burnt offerings in tenth and eleventh century texts (PCM I 27, front l. 23; PCM I 30 front l. 5; PCM I 31 front l. 38, back 17–18). It is probably to be associated with the “three of destruction” (ⲉⲧⲡⲣⲁⲕⲟ), found in a text of a similar date (PCM I 37 back l. 20). These are all curses of separation or destruction. The burnt offerings found in other curses and separation spells are not consistent enough to suggest what these three items were—common incenses (such as *mastic or myrrh) or other objects (such as menstrual blood or carbon). “Evil” in this context should probably be understood primarily in the sense of “causing harm” rather than as metaphysical evil (cf. Dosoo 2023a: 174 n. 254; Young 1970: 195 for the case of Ethiopia), although the two can easily blur together; in PCM I 30, for example, “doing evil” is associated with the demons and their ruler, Beelzebub.

Twenty-Four Presbyters

The Twenty-Four Presbyters (Greek/Coptic πρεσβύτερος/πρεσβύτερος presbuteros) first appear in the vision of heaven in Revelation 4–5. They are described as sitting on twenty-four thrones surrounding that of God, dressed in white and wearing golden crowns, holding harps and bowls of incense. The term presbuteros in Greek originally meant “elder”, and is often translated as such in English, but in the context of the Christian church it came to refer to the clerical rank whose primary task was the performance of the divine liturgy, in English, the “priest” (a word ultimately derived from presbuteros). In the Christian Egyptian tradition, they are thus understood as the angelic priests whose role it is to transmit the prayers of the faithful to God, and carry out the liturgy in the church which exists in heaven. The number twenty-four led to a secondary association with the letters of the Greek alphabet, so that in some schemes the names of the Twenty-Four Presbyters each began with a different letter of the alphabet—Akhaēl, Banouēl, Ganaēl, and so on. In this volume, the Twenty-Four Presbyters are mentioned in PCM I 12 p. 41 ll. 16–17; PCM I 17 front l. 9; PCM I 25 p. 5 ll. 13–20; PCM I 26 p. 9 l. 16.

THE MS., dating from the third century A.D., which is here edited for the first time in a single whole, has long been known to scholars. Its subject-matter—magic and medicine—is not destitute of interest. It is closely connected with the Greek magical papyri from Egypt of the same period, but, being written in demotic, naturally does not reproduce the Greek hymns which are so important a feature of those papyri. The influence of purely Greek mythology also is here by comparison very slight—hardly greater than that of the Alexandrian Judaism which has supplied a number of names of Hellenistic form to the demotic magician. Mithraism has apparently contributed nothing at all: Christianity probably only a deformed reference to the Father in Heaven. On the other hand, as might have been expected, Egyptian mythology has an overwhelmingly strong position, and whereas the Greek papyri scarcely go beyond Hermes, Anubis, and the Osiris legend, the demotic magician introduces Khons, Amon, and many other Egyptian gods. Also, whereas the former assume a knowledge of the modus operandi in divination by the lamp and bowl, the latter describes it in great detail.

But the papyrus is especially interesting for the language in which it is written. It is probably the latest Egyptian MS. which we possess written in the demotic script, and it presents us with the form of the language as written—almost as spoken—by the pagans at the time when the Greek alphabet was being adopted by the Christians. It must not be forgotten, too, that this is the document which contributed perhaps more than any other to the decipherment of demotic, partly through its numerous Greek glosses.

We have therefore thought that a complete edition, with special reference to its philological importance, would be useful. The vocabulary is extensive, comprising about a thousand words. The present volume, containing the introduction, the transliteration, translation, and notes, will be followed by a complete glossary, with separate indices of Greek words, invocation names, names of animals, plants, and minerals, and a list of the glosses, &c., besides a chapter dealing with the principal grammatical forms met with in the MS., and a hand-copy of the text; the photographic reproduction by Hess of the pages in the British Museum and Leemans' facsimile of those at Leiden will of course preserve their independent value for reference, as, for instance, in judging the condition of the MS. and the precise forms of the signs in particular passages.

There is considerable inconsistency in the spelling of words in the papyrus itself. So much having to be rendered more or less conventionally, while fresh light is thrown daily on the intricacies of demotic, it is probable that there are a good many inconsistencies in our transliterations, translations, and notes, in spite of the watchfulness of the excellent reader at the Clarendon Press. Those, however, who have dealt with the subject at all will probably not judge these too hardly.

In conclusion, we have to record our gratitude, first, to our predecessors in publication and decipherment of the papyrus—to Reuvens, Leemans, and Hess, to Brugsch, Maspero, Revillout, and W. Max Müller—but for whose varied contributions our task would have been infinitely more laborious even in the present advanced state of the study: and secondly, to the authorities of the Egyptian department in the British Museum, and of the Rijksmuseum in Leiden, for their courtesy in affording every facility for studying the original MS., and more especially to Dr. Boeser of the Leiden Museum for much kindness and assistance.

INTRODUCTION

I. HISTORY OF THE MS.

THE demotic magical papyrus of London and Leiden was discovered at Thebes with other papyri, principally Greek but dealing with subjects of a like nature, in the early part of the last century, and was bought by Anastasi, who was at that time Swedish consul at Alexandria, and made a large collection of Egyptian MSS. When Anastasi obtained the MS. it must already have been torn into two parts, and it is even probable that he obtained the two parts at different times, since he sold his Egyptian collections, including the Leiden MS., to the Dutch government in 1828, while the London portion was bought at the sale of his later collections at Paris in 1857 for the British Museum (No. 1072 in Lenormant's Catalogue).

The Leiden fragment was made known to the world much earlier than that in the British Museum. Its importance for the deciphering of the demotic script by the help of the numerous glosses in Graeco-Coptic characters was at once perceived by the distinguished scholar Reuvens, at that time Director of the Leiden Museum of Antiquities, who proceeded to study it carefully, and in 1830 published an admirable essay¹ in which he sketched the principal contents of the MS. and indicated its value for the progress of demotic studies. He then took in hand its reproduction, and the MS. was lithographed in facsimile under his direction, and he had corrected the proofs of the first plate when he was cut off by a premature death in 1835; his work was carried to completion and published by his successor in the Directorship of the Museum, Leemans, in 1839¹. Heinrich Brugsch studied it closely, and drew from it most of the examples quoted in his Demotic Grammar published in 1855; but, although later scholars have frequently quoted from it and translated fragments of it, the MS. has hitherto remained without complete translation, commentary, or glossary.

The London MS., however, lay from 1857 onwards almost unnoticed in the British Museum. To the late Dr. Pleyte, Leemans' successor at Leiden, belongs the credit of discovering that the two MSS. originally formed one. He had studied the Leiden portion, and at once recognized the handwriting of its fellow in London. Without publishing the fact, he communicated it to Professor Hess of Freiburg, when the latter was working in Leiden on the MS. there. Professor Hess went on to London, and, having fully confirmed Dr. Pleyte's statement, published in 1892 a reproduction of the British Museum MS. with an introduction, including the translation of one column, and a glossary².

Reuvers in his essay dwelt at some length on the 'gnostic' character of the MS. He devoted his attention mainly to the parts which contain the glosses, and those are almost exclusively magical invocations, among which occur the names of gods, spirits, and demons, Egyptian, Syrian, Jewish, &c., strung together in a manner similar to those found in gnostic writings and on gnostic gems. He even went so far as to associate them with the name of a particular gnostic leader, Marcus, of the second century, chiefly on the ground of his recorded use of Hebrew and Syriac names in his invocations and the combinations of vowels. In consequence the MS. has acquired the name of the 'Leiden Gnostic,' and the term 'Gnostic' has been passed on to the London MS. But as will be seen from the complete translation here published, there is nothing in the work relating to the gnostic systems—it deals with magic and medicine, and it seems a misnomer to call the MS. gnostic merely because part of the stock-in-trade of the magician and medicine-man were a number of invocation names which he either picked up from the gnostics or derived from sources common to him and them. Hence it has been thought desirable to abandon the epithet 'gnostic,' and to call the work the 'Magical papyrus of London and Leiden' (Pap. mag. LL.).

II. CONDITION OF THE MS.

The London portion is in far better condition than the Leiden portion. The papyrus is pale in colour and the ink very black; consequently where the MS. has not suffered material damage it is easy to read, as the scribe wrote a beautiful and regular hand.

The Leiden papyrus, on the other hand, has unfortunately suffered much, as Leemans, with a view to protecting the surface, covered both recto and verso with 'vegetable' paper, which probably could not be removed now without serious injury to the MS.; but either the paper or the adhesive matter employed with it has darkened and decayed, rendering the writing illegible in places.

In 1829, while the MS. was still in charge of Reuvens and before it had been subjected to the operation above described, he took a tracing of it which has been preserved, and which, though of little assistance in points of minute detail, may be relied on for filling up with certainty many groups which are now wholly lost in the original.

The main body of the writing is on the recto (horizontal fibres) of the papyrus, while on the verso are written memoranda, medical prescriptions, and short invocations.

The London MS. is Pap. No. 10070 of the British Museum (formerly Anast. 1072).

The Leiden MS. is known as I. 383 (reckoned among the Anastasi MSS. as A. 65).

The London portion forms the initial part of the MS. and joins on to the Leiden portion without a break, the tenth and last column of the London MS. and the first of the Leiden forming one column.

The first London column is imperfect, and it is not possible to say with certainty whether the MS. began with it or whether there was an anterior part now lost. It is quite possible that it began here. On the other hand, it is certain that the MS. is imperfect at the end, since the broken edge of the papyrus at Leiden shows traces of a column of writing succeeding the present final column.

It is impossible to estimate how much is lost, as the MS. is not an original composition on a definite plan, but a compilation of heterogeneous material collected together without any logical order.

The two portions, if joined together, would measure, roughly speaking, some 5 m. (about 16½ feet) in length. In height it averages nearly 25 cm. (10 in.). The writing is in columns, of which there are twenty-nine on the recto, while on the verso are thirty-three small columns or portions of columns; but these are not marked off, as are the recto columns, by vertical and horizontal framing lines¹, nor are they written continuously, but they seem to have been jotted down there on account of their brevity and discontinuous character.

The recto columns vary somewhat in size, but average 20 × 20 cm. (8 in. square). The writing is frequently carried beyond the framing lines.

In each column of the recto the number of lines is on the average about thirty to thirty-three; but the number is very irregular, ranging from forty-three in one column to five in another.

III. CONTENTS.

As has been stated above, the MS. is a compilation. An analysis of the contents will be found on page 14. From this it will be seen to consist mainly of directions for divination processes involving numerous invocations, together with erotica and medical prescriptions, in which, however, magic plays as large a part as medicine.

The MS. is far from being unique in regard to its contents. Fragments of similar works in demotic exist at Paris (Louvre, No. 3229, published by Maspero, Quelques papyrus du Louvre, 1875), and at Leiden (I. 384 verso, Anast. 75, published by Leemans, Mons. du musée de Leide, 1842, pl. ccxxvi-vii) a MS. partly demotic and partly Greek, the latter portion being published by Leemans in Pap. graeci mus. lugd. bat. 1885, ii. Pap. V, and re-edited by Dieterich, Pap. Mag. Mus. Lugd. Bat. The Greek papyri containing similar texts are numerous, many examples having been published from the museums of Berlin, Leiden, London, and Paris by Goodwin, Parthey, Leemans, Wessely, and Kenyon.

The well-known codex of the Bibliothèque Nationale published by Wessely, Denkschr. Kais. Ak. Wiss. Wien, xxxvi. 1888, contains a few invocations in Old Coptic along with the Greek (cf. Griffith, A. Z. 1901, p. 85, and bibliography, ibid. p. 72).

Magic was from the earliest times largely developed by the Egyptians in relation both to the dead and the living. Under the former head fall both the pyramid texts and other texts found in the tombs, including most of the Book of the Dead, which consists mainly of magical invocations intended to make smooth the path of the deceased in the next world.

Magical texts for the use of the living are found in the Harris magical papyrus (ed. Chabas, 1860), the Metternich stela (ed. Golenischeff, 1877) and kindred stones, the Berlin papyrus edited by Erman (Zauber-sprüche für Mutter u. Kind, 1901), &c. Reference may be made to the volume on Egyptian magic by Dr. Wallis Budge, 1899, and to a special study on vessel-divination by E. Lefébure, 'Le vase divinatoire,' in Sphinx, 1902, VI. 61 seq. Cf. also Dieterich, 'Abraxas'; Kenyon in Cat. Greek Pap. in B. M., I. 62 seq.; Miss Macdonald in P. S. B. A., xiii. 160 seq.; Wünsch, Sethianische Verfluchungstafeln aus Rom, &c.

In the closely allied department of medicine, it is sufficient to refer to the Ebers papyrus, the Kahun papyri, and the Berlin medical papyrus (ed. Brugsch, Rec. Mon. pl. 87-107), which offer many parallels. Among the Greek medical writers it is noticeable that Alexander of Tralles seems much more closely allied to the Egyptian school, if that be represented by our MS., than Galen.

But though the subject-matter of the MS. is not without its interest for the history of magic and medicine, its chief claim to publication lies in its philological interest. From the first its numerous glosses have attracted the attention of scholars, and have been the means of fixing the value of a large number of demotic groups. Further it is in date probably the latest known papyrus written in the demotic script; most of the glosses are really Coptic transcriptions, and under this head may likewise be included all the Egyptian words written in cipher; so that the MS. in these furnishes us with a series of very early Coptic words, including several grammatical forms of great interest. Possibly too the text may be of importance in relation to the question of dialects in pagan Egypt; but that is a subject too little worked out at present to allow of definite statements. The vocabulary is very extensive, and includes a number of Greek words, the names of over 100 plants, besides numerous animals and minerals.

As the London portion of the MS., which in the order of contents is the first part, was published fifty years later than the second part at Leiden, it follows that each publication has an independent numbering of the columns, starting from I. In view of the fact that there are many references in demotic literature already to the columns by their numbers as established by the publications of Leemans and Hess, it would have been desirable to retain the existing numbering if possible. But, as will be seen by comparison of the hand copy of the whole MS. which accompanies this edition with the former publications, the changes in the way of consolidation of the columns, and in some cases necessary re-numbering of the lines, have made it compulsory to introduce a new and continuous numbering of the columns. For instance, Hess col. X and Leemans col. I form a single column, and the same is the case with Leemans cols. II and III and cols. IV and V, and with verso, cols. XVI and XVII, XXII and XXIII. A comparative table of the old and new numbers will be found at the end.

V. THE GLOSSES.

There are about 640 words with transcriptions in Coptic characters in addition to a few inserted in the text.

Besides all the letters of the Greek alphabet we find the following used:—

fl (= R 26/15).	6 (= t : w 9/11).
z (= R 7/33, 25/34).	y (= c 2/10, 9/14).
h (= l 25/34, 35 text).	^ (= z 9/14, 25/34).
⌘ (= w 2/13, 5/23, 8/8).	9 (= z 2/4).
3 (= w 1/25, 8/9, 13, V. 5/9).	5 (= s 9/6, 29/10).
λ (= w 2/18).	♯ (= x 2/26, 29/10).

The glosses were undoubtedly written by the same scribe who wrote the demotic text. And it seems that he wrote the glosses before he filled in the rubrics. For the handwriting of the demotic text and of the rubrics is unquestionably the same; and in filling up in red the empty spaces he had left for rubrication, the scribe took occasion to fill in with his red ink occasional lapses in the black writing. In the text this can be observed in e.g. 24/1, the omitted σ of the second str (?) has been filled up in red, and also the omitted determinative in the last word of 28/8, an omitted letter in phr 29/11, an omitted word šn interlineated in 29/12, and a plural sign in 25/26; and so too the gloss ewe in 28/8, overlooked when the glosses were originally inserted in black ink.

It is a fact that there is often a considerable difference between the Greek letters in the passages written in Greek and in the glosses (e.g. παπιπρετου in 15/25 and 15/29), but this may be accounted for by the fact that the former are written in a cursive hand with ligatures, while the glosses are carefully written with separately formed letters without ligatures for distinctness' sake in the narrow space between the lines.

The above considerations, however, only show that the text and glosses were written by the same hand in our existing MS. It does not follow that they were written by the original compiler. Max Müller has argued (Rec. tr., viii. 175) that they must be due to another individual since they are mostly in the Fayumic dialect, while the dialect of the demotic text is 'Untersahidisch' (i. e. Achmimic, so called by Stern). In Rec. tr., xiii. 152 u., he replaces the latter term by a more precise definition: 'Die Mundart steht zwischen Fayumisch u. dem Mittel-ägyptischen von Akhmîm, letzterem näher.' But it is very doubtful whether this distinction between the text and the glosses can be maintained. The only example quoted by Max Müller that distinctly suggests Fayumic is the gloss $\lambda\omega$ and λ over a group in 16/5 and 25/34, which he reads as = (ε) $\rho\sigma\sigma$, regarding the interchange of ρ and λ as evidence of Fayumic dialect. But the demotic group in question does not read er-w, but mr as in mr- γ $\frac{1}{2}$ (1/17, 2/7, 14/6, 28), and the gloss $\lambda\omega$ represents the absolute form of the late Egyptian word which we see in its construct form in Sahidic $\lambda\epsilon\omega\eta\eta\psi\epsilon$ and in $\lambda\epsilon\sigma\omega\nu\iota\varsigma$. From the detailed examination of the dialect (in vol. ii) it appears probable that the dialect of the text does not show any distinction from that of the glosses, and it is not necessary to go behind the scribe of the present MS. and place the compiler earlier. He may well have been one and the same.

VI. DATE.

Reuvens (u. s. p. 151) placed the date of the MS. in the first half of the third century A. D., and this was repeated by Leemans.

Groff and Hess attributed it on palaeographical grounds to the second century; but in the light of recent additions to the knowledge of Greek palaeography, and the opinions based on them of Kenyon, Grenfell, and Hunt (see A. Z., xxxix. (1901) p. 78), the third century must be accepted as the date of the MS. But this, of course, is the date at which the papyrus was written, and merely furnishes a terminus ad quem for deciding as to the date of the contents.

That the whole of the papyrus, in its present state, was written by one and the same scribe—with the possible exception of verso XXVIII—can scarcely be a matter of doubt to any one who has studied closely the handwriting of the original MSS. It must be stated, however, that Reuvens and Leemans were of opinion that the glosses were written by a later hand than that of the body of the text: but this question has been discussed above (p. 9), and apart from the identity of ink, and the material proof given there, it may be added that the hieratic glosses in 27/8 are certainly written by the same hand as the numerous hieratic passages scattered through the text.

The date of the contents is a much more complicated question. Written partly in hieratic, partly in demotic, and partly in Greek, they wear the aspect of a compilation, which is borne out by the varied and disconnected nature of the subject-matter.

It has been suggested that the work is a translation into demotic of a Greek original, and perhaps this is the first question demanding discussion. Prima facie it may be said to be likely, as so many similar works exist in Greek. The introduction of three invocations of considerable length written in Greek characters almost compels us to accept that origin for those particular sections, viz. 4/1–19, 15/24–31, 23/7–20. It seems probable that the translator felt he could transfer to Egyptian the prescriptions and preparations, while the formula of incantation had to be left in the original language. Had these sections been written in Egyptian originally, it is not likely that an incantation in a foreign tongue would be inserted in the place presumably of an Egyptian one.

And in the first named instance there is the additional evidence of two true Greek glosses, i.e. not Coptic transcriptions of the demotic words, but Greek equivalents of the two words 'table' and 'goose,' which seem to be inserted clearly to prevent a misunderstanding of the original terms. In the second instance 15/24-31, the original Greek lines 25-28 are immediately followed by a demotic translation of the same passage (ll. 29-31), which points in the same direction. Translation from the Greek is rendered probable, outside the passages already referred to, by the transcription of Greek prescriptions and substances in 24/1-25, and verso I, II, VIII, IX. According to an ingenious suggestion of Max Müller, in verso II the otherwise unintelligible phrase m^cnes n rm is almost certainly a mistranslation of μαγνησία ἀνδρεία. Max Müller has also (Rec. tr., viii. 175-6) given strong reasons for regarding the passage 25/23-37 as being translated from a Greek original. However, even where there are reasons for believing that the demotic is a translation from the Greek, the original source, in relation to magic at any rate, was probably Egyptian—certainly so in the case of the Greek passage in 15/25-28, which has itself clearly an Egyptian origin.

On the other hand, some of the chief sections of the MS. show no traces of Greek influence, e.g. cols. VI and XV. 1-20; but it would be rash to say that they are older; they may well represent only a purer Egyptian source. Max Müller (Rec. tr., viii. 172) has suggested that some of the magic formulae go back to the period from the Eighteenth to the Twentieth Dynasty. This cannot be true of more than a few phrases. The language indeed is not entirely uniform, but throughout the papyrus the vocabulary and grammar are distinctly not 'Late Egyptian'; they are 'demotic,' and that too of a kind which approaches Coptic much more closely than in any other known papyrus. Certain passages, such as the spell in 13/1-10, show more or less archaism, but in all cases it is mixed with late forms.

The use of hieratic might be thought to indicate some antiquity where it occurs. But the writing is a strange jumble; the hieratic is inextricably though sparingly mixed with the demotic, a single word being often written partly in hieratic, partly in demotic. Where hieratic signs occur the language is not generally more archaic than when the demotic is pure. In 23/24 the word Abrasax is written in hieratic. Now Abrasax is usually regarded as a typical gnostic invocation name, Irenaeus having stated that it was invented by Basilides (fl. 125 A. D.). This statement is now generally regarded as an error, and the name may be earlier; but there is no authority for placing it in pre-Christian times (cf. Hort, s. v. Abrasax, in Smith, Dict. Christ. Biog.; Dieterich, Abrasax, p. 46; C. Schmidt, Gnostische Schriften in Kopt. Spr., 1892, p. 562).

Not many documents written in hieratic have been ascertained to be later than the first century A. D.; but they were plentiful at Tanis amongst the burnt papyri found by Professor Petrie in the house of 'Bakakhuui' (Asychis), the destruction of which Mr. Petrie was disposed to date to 174 A. D. (Tanis, i. p. 41); and Clemens Alexandrinus (Strom. v. 237) mentions hieratic as still taught in the schools (circa A. D. 160-220). Hieroglyphic inscriptions, with the name of Decius (249-251), are found in the temple of Esneh, and the existence of hieroglyphic almost implies that of hieratic.

Judging by the language, it is difficult to believe that any part of the work in its present redaction is more than a century or two older than the papyrus itself.

The contents of the papyrus may be classified as follows :—

1. Divination—

- (a) by the vessel of oil I-III, IX-X. 22, XIV, XVIII. 7-33, XXI. 1-9, XXII(?), XXVIII, verso XXII, verso XXVI.
- (b) by a lamp V, VI-VII, VIII. 1-12, XVI, XVII-XVIII. 6, XXV. 1-22, XXVII. 13-36, verso XVIII, verso XXIV, verso XXXI.
- (c) by the sun X. 22-end, XXVII. 1-12, XXIX.
- (d) by moon XXIII. 21-31.
- (e) by the Foreleg constellation (Great Bear) verso XVIII.
- (f) by stars ? IV. 23-4.
- (g) through the priest Psash (?) VIII. 12-end.
- (h) through Imuthes IV. 1-22.
- (i) by dreams verso XVII, eye-paint XXI, invocation XXVII ? XXVIII.
- (k) for thief-catching III. 29, or shipwreck (?) verso XV.

2. to obtain favour and respect XI, verso XXXII. to avert anger of superior XV. 24-31.

3. Erotica—

- by potions XV. 1-21, XXI. 10-43, XXV. 23-XXVI.
- by salves XII, verso III. 14-16, XII-XIII. 9, XIII. 10-11, XIV, XXIII, XXV, XXX, XXXII.
- αγωγιμον* verso XVI, XVII, XIX.
- διακοπη* XIII. 1-10.

4. Poisons, &c.—

- blinding XIII. 11, XXIV. 30.
- soporifics XXIII. 1-20, XXIV, verso II. 16-III. 3.
- maddening (magic) verso XXIX.
- slaying XXIII. 7, XXIV. 28, verso XXXII.
- uses of the shrew-mouse, &c. (chiefly in erotica) XIII. 11-end and verso XXXII.

5. Healing—

- poison XIX. 10-21.
- sting XX. 1-27.
- dog's bite XIX. 9, 32-40.
- bone in throat XIX. 21-32, XX. 27-33.
- gout and other affections of feet verso VIII-X, XI.
- water in ears verso IV. 1-5.
- ophthalmia (?) verso XX.
- fever verso XXXIII.
- haemorrhage, &c. in woman verso V. 1-3, 9-13, V. 4-8.
- to ascertain pregnancy verso V. 4-8.

6. names or descriptions of plants, drugs, &c. verso I-II. 15, III. 4-13, 17-18, IV. 6-19, V. 14-17.

EXPLANATION OF SIGNS

TRANSLATION.

RESTORATIONS are placed in square brackets []. Lacunae in the original, for which no restoration is suggested, are represented by dots. Words in round brackets () are not in the original, but are added by the translators; those between angular brackets < > are intended to be omitted.

The second person singular has been rendered by 'thou, thee' in invocations, by 'you' elsewhere. In the very few instances in which the second person plural occurs, it is indicated by the use of 'ye' or 'you' (plur.); (bis) following a word indicates that the word is followed in the original by the sign sp sn, implying that the word or phrase is to be repeated.

An accurate transcription of the magic names is given in the transliteration; in the translation we have rendered the sound approximately without strict adherence to any one system, generally following the glosses where they exist, as it was thought that this would be the most useful course for such readers as are not Egyptian scholars.

TRANSLITERATION.

For the system, see note preceding the demotic glossary. Words transliterated with Coptic letters between asterisks are written in cipher in the original.

REFERENCES.

In referring to the plates of the papyrus in vol. ii, Col. I. l. 1 is quoted as 1/1 and verso, Col. II. l. 3 as V. 2/3, &c.

l. 1. Restore from 18/7. The parallel text to ll. 13-17 shows that more than half of the page is lost, but the heading line was probably not of full length. Pr-mze is περμζε (Oxyrhynchus), capital of the nineteenth nome of Upper Egypt.

l. 2. Pr- . . . e (?). The group suggests a reading Pr-ʾr-ʾmn for περρμρν (Pelusium), but the ʾr (?) sign is perhaps too upright, and it is more likely that the two signs following Pr are a special group for some divine name. Nothing is known of the religious importance of Pelusium, or even of its name in Egyptian, but the city is mentioned in a Greek invocation quoted below at l. 12.

l. 3. šḥ (?). This group, here in the plural, may represent  šḥ, 'toes' (LANGE, A. Z., 1896, 76). Cf. LEPSIUS, Todtenb., c. 42, l. 9 iw zḥ·w-ḥ šḥ·w-ḥ m ʿr·tw (sic) ʿnh·w, 'my fingers and toes are as rearing serpents.' But the same group recurs in 7/2 as a masc. sing. subst. where the context rather suggests the meaning 'testicles.'

ʿnh·t, of a serpent, cf. 12/17; in Egyptian PLEYTE, Pap. Tur., cxxxii. 4 and (very late) Mar. Pap. Boul., I. Pl. 9, ll. 5-6. It seems to mean 'darting forward for attack.' Similar meanings, 'rise,' &c., are common, esp. in late texts, BR., Wtb., 198-9; cf. also 9/16, 10/7. But in GRIFFITH, Tell el Yahudiyeh, xxv. 15, an enraged serpent ʿnh nf·w-f 'breathed its vapour' at a god, ʿnh being there a transitive verb surviving in Sah. ⲁⲛⲩⲩ-ⲧⲏⲧ 'breathe,' BSCAI, Rec. tr., vii. 25 (Job ix. 18).

p nwn. It is a question whether this is the hieroglyphic . The latter occurs only twice in this papyrus, but in one of the instances it is clearly parallel to nwn. Cf. xxi. 33 nte-k py k km hyt 'r pyr n p  with ix. 15 'nk p hf 'r pyr n p nwn.

l. 6. 'rq-hh. BRUGSCH, Dict. Geog., 130, 1121 = [a]λχαυ 15/27, O. C. Par. αλχαι (A. Z., 1883, 104), the necropolis at Abydos where the head of Osiris was preserved. It is spelt with l, 'lg-hh only once in 15/30, cf. the converse in gh'ikter = χαρκτηρ 5/5.

'm-n. αλωιη, cf. MÜLLER, A. Z., 1893, 50, who suggests that it is cohortative 1st plur. 'let us come,' or for 'm-w n-y, 'come ye unto me,' with the n-y unaccented being reduced to an enclitic, but cf. 11/16 'm-n n-y.

sr-my-srpt. The same signs recur grouped together in varying order as a divine appellative in 9/6 and 11/8. The knife  and hide  are the zodiacal signs of Leo and Aries (BRUGSCH, Nouv. Rech., p. 22); the flower or seed-head is the peculiar determinative of the καρποτ throughout this papyrus. The same divine name, composed of a lotus bud (?)  with lion and spelt-out name of ram (srw), occurs in LEPS., Todt., cap. 162, l. 5, variants giving srpd for the lotus bud (?) (BR., Wtb., 1265) and m'y for the lion (Leyd. Lijkpap., No. 16). Cf. also PLEYTE, Chapitres Suppl., Pl. 14 and 131. The group of a lotus leaf, lion, and ram is figured on several hypocephali, the best example being in BUDGE, Lady Meux Cat., 2nd ed., Pl. VI. Cf. PLEYTE, ib. text, Pl. opp. p. 60. Probably none of these instances are earlier than the Persian invasion. Outside our papyrus the normal order is evidently lotus-lion-ram, and Greek versions agree with this: Brit. Mus. Pap. CXXI. l. 499 εγω εμι ο εν τω Πηλουσιω καθιδρυμενος Σερφουθ: μονισρω: (so facs.), similarly l. 557; in Leyd. Pap. V. col. 3 a, l. 6, the spelling is varied and corrupt. In each case σερφουθ is marked off from μονισρω, the latter appearing as one word. On a gnostic gem in the Wilson Collection belonging to Aberdeen University is the legend:—σερφουθ μονισρω λαιλαμ dos μοι χαριν πραξιν νεικην. In this combination the lotus (καρποτ, see below, 2/17), the lion (αιστ, see below, 5/11), and the ram (ερσ, see below, 11/8 and 14/13, and decan names in BR., Wtb. Suppl., 995) probably all represent solar attributes.

rn-yt. This abnormal spelling apparently arises from a combination (oil); cause to succeed (9) for this vessel-divination is the vessel-divination of Isis, when she sought (10) come in to me, O my compeller (?), for everything (11) and cause the eyes of this child to be opened to them all, (12) for I am the Pharaoh Lion-ram; Ram-lion-lotus is my name (13) to thee here to-day, for I am Sit-ta-ko, Setem is my name, Setem (14) [is my true name, &c.] Hrenoute, Lapptotha, Laxantha, Sa-(15)[risa, &c.] Bolbouel (bis), Louteri, (Klo-)Kasantra, Iaho (16) [is my name, &c., Balkam the] dread (?) one of heaven, Ablanathanalba, the gryphon (17) [of the shrine of God, &c.]. of the earlier rn-y and the later form found in O. C. Par. ερεπτ (A. Z., 1900, 89, cf. Boh. ερεπκ Hyv. Actes, 108). Cf. 14/2 yrt-yt.

l. 13. Lines 13-17 are repeated with the missing passages complete in verso XXVII, which is written on the back of this and the following column.

syt-t'-k. The first element is written as the 'serpent' επ in the parallel text and k is bull (κρ, 7/33), but t' seems meaningless. It may possibly be 'the impregnator of the cow,' cf. BUDGE, Nesiamsu, iii. 6, p' k' sty m l'wt. In PARTHEY, Zwei gr. Zauberpap., i. 252, we have practically the same phrase introduced into an O. C. context which gives an entirely different meaning, 'I am Osiris whom Set destroyed,' πεντασιτ ταρο(ς); see ERMAN, A. Z., 1883, 109 note.

stm, i. e. 'hearing,' or perhaps 'hearer,' but the personal determinative is absent.

l. 15. Kasantra alone without κλο appears in the demotic of both texts, suggesting a reminiscence of the prophetess Cassandra.

l. 16. srrf the hieroglyphic sfr of II Beni Hasan, Pl. IV, a winged quadruped with raptorial beak. The srrf is described in Kufi, xv. 1 seq., as 'the image (?) of god (?), the king (?) of all that is in the world, the avenger that cannot (himself) be punished; his beak is that of the falcon, his eyes those of a man, his limbs of a lion, his ears of a . . . , his scales of a water- . . . , his tail a serpent's.' Further, he is the mightiest of beings next to God, has authority over everything on earth like Death, and is the instrument of God's vengeance.

l. 17. sz, cf. 6/19 for the complete phrase. The meaning 'drawl' is not quite certain. It must be some artificial way of speaking, such as whining or muttering, cf. 7/32 and Leyd. Pap. Gr. W. col. 1, l. 38, col. 3. l. 2, and φθογγος αναγκαστικός, &c., Brit. Mus. Gr. Pap. CXXI. 765 seq.

p-mr-ʿh pronounced p-le-ehe, produces the common Ptolemaic proper name Πελαίας, as is proved by a bilingual (SPIEGELBERG, Strassb. Pap. No. 21, text, pp. 21-2, the reading P-ers to be corrected to p-mr-ʿh; the Greek nominative shown in GRENF. Amh. Pap. LI. 5). The religious significance of this appellation, 'the good oxherd,' is not clear, nor has it been traced in early texts; from 2/7 it is clearly applied to Anubis, and perhaps dogs were used for herding cattle in Ancient Egypt? It is probably equivalent to Gk. ποιμην, for which see GOODWIN, Cambridge Essays, 1852, p. 26, B. M. Gr. Pap. XLVI, l. 31. If the Good Shepherd is the meaning, we may note the Χριστος Ανουβις of Leyd. Pap. Gr. V. vi. 17.

1. 14. aph-ʿo-b-ʿo-s, &c. As the glosses show this is merely a transcription of the Greek words ἀφόβως ἀψεύστως ἐπ' ἀληθεία, and to mark this the determinative of that which is foreign is placed at the end of each word. It is interesting to find the initial letter /, here and in 10/30, representing the Gk. α, and so indicating that that was its normal pronunciation. In Achm. it corresponds to α, rarely ε, in Sah. and Boh. to ε, rarely α. ε is probably a wearing down or shortening of the earlier α.

* The group for ʿny is that which spells ne-ʿne (ⲛⲁⲛⲟⲩ) in ordinary texts, but here the ne is superfluous, and in this papyrus a false ne is always written before ʿne, so that ⲛⲁⲛⲟⲩ has to be written out ne(-ne)-ʿne. In other texts as well as this we find ne-nfr with a false ne-, probably due to the initial sound of nfr, and this may have led to the otiose ne before ʿne in the present text.

sšn, srpt, see LORET, Rec. trav., i. 190, for a useful but by no means final discussion of the Egyptian names of the lotus. srpt (see 1/12) is a name apparently of late introduction, sšn is very ancient, and both words are to be paralleled, with varied meaning, in Semitic languages. From this passage one may conjecture that srpt is the lotus bud and sšn the flower.

Apparently Thoth and Anubis are here united, cf. the name Hermanubis and l. 21. hry-sšt, 'chief over the mysteries,' is another old title appropriate enough for either Thoth or Anubis.

l. 20. 'For they all live by thee.' Apparently Anubis was responsible for the provision of food and attendance on the souls.

l. 21. p yt·w sp-sn is intended to be read p yt yt·w as 8/2. Cf. the common appellation προπατωρ in the Gk. papyri. 'Father of the fathers of all the gods' occurs perhaps as early as the N. K. in Boul. Pap. No. 17, p. 7, l. 6 (Hymn to Amon-Re).

l. 22. nte-k z n-y wh. For this formula cf. O. C. Par. πρεσβι οτω και αφωδ επιχποτ αμμοστ εποζ (sic) (A. Z., 1900, 89). εισελθε και χρηματισον B. M. Pap. XLVI. 445. šn, lit. 'inquire,' is used vaguely, both of the inquiry and of the answer in this papyrus, as χρηματιζειν in Greek. ⲡⲣⲏⲓ ⲉⲁ in Copt. is 'beg for,' not 'ask a question'; possibly it has such a meaning here.

l. 24. hr n ntr·w ʿy, &c. = *(ϩ)ⲁⲛⲏⲧⲏⲣ ⲉⲓ . . . *(ϩ)ⲁⲧ ⲉⲓ (see chapter on grammar in vol. ii).

l. 25. 'And you see them' is an addition above the line which does not seem appropriate, as the boy, not the magician, is to see them.

nhe-k . . . nhs·t-k: the defective spelling nhe is found again in the papyrus, leaving no doubt that it represents nhse, 'waken,' 'raise.' The verb is 'iv^{tae} infirmæ' according to SETHE, and the suffix form, lost in Coptic, shows here a curious uncertainty as to the retention of the t.

l. 26. wr-ty. Originally the title of the high priest of Thoth at Hermopolis Magna (Khmun), it was perhaps applied later to the ibis-god himself (e. g. LEGRAIN, Livre des transf., iv. 5). Evidently in connexion with this, Thoth is called 'the god five times great (ʿo), the mighty (wr) lord of Khmun' (II MAHAFFY, Petrie Pap. Pl. 13, II Kham.

5, 7). The common Ptolemaic name Πορτις (cf. GRENFELL, Gk. Pap. I, II; Amherst Pap.; WILCKEN, Gr. Ostr.) in the witnesses of the Grey antigraph (Brit. Mus. Gr. Pap. I. Pl. 27) is P-wr-ty in the corresponding Berlin demotic Pap. 3119 verso (Berl. Dem. Pap. Pl. 16). Πορτις is no doubt founded on an abbreviated pronunciation of the name which we have here with its full value P-wer-tiu. In V. 33/2 we have the normal orthography of the title, varied here and in 22/1.

Meaning very uncertain; if the dot after qme be taken as closing the phrase, the 'r must be regarded as passive in meaning 'let a creation (?) be made,' cf. 5/22 my wn yr-t and GRIFF., High Priests, p. 87, n. to l. 6, and SETHE, Verb., ii. § 247, and mḥ following the dot suggests an imperative. Perhaps Mareqom (?) is to be taken as a magical name.

l. 27. 'q a p ḥt, perhaps may be participial rather than imperative. 'q r ḥt, lit. 'enter the heart,' is common in early demotic in the sense of 'please.' Cf. ΔΡΓΤΗΞ (SPIEGELB., Rec. trav., xxiii. 201) ΩΚ Π ΖΗΤ (BSCIAI, ib., vii. 27).

Z., 1883, 99) and Brit. Mus. Pap. Gr. No. XLVI. l. 206, for the use of σινδών in magic.

Omit the words 'you call down into his head.'

and you take a new dish and fill it with (10) clean Oasis oil and add to the dish gradually without producing cloudiness (?) so that it becomes clear (11) exceedingly; and you take a boy, pure, before he has gone with a woman, you speak down into his head (12) while he stands, previously, (to learn) whether he will be profitable in going to the vessel. If he is profitable, you make him lie on (?) his belly; (13) you clothe (?) him with a clean linen tunic (?), <you call down into his head>, there being a girdle on the upper part (14) of the tunic; you utter this invocation that is above, down into his head, he gazing downwards <looking> into the oil, for seven times, his eyes being (15) closed. When you have finished, you make him open his eyes, you ask him about what you desire; you do it until the time of the seventh hour of the day.

(16) The invocation that you utter down into his head previously to test him in his ears as to whether he will be profitable in going to (17) the vessel. Formula: 'Noble ibis, falcon, hawk, noble and mighty, let me be purified in the manner of the noble ibis, falcon, (18) hawk, noble and mighty.' You utter this down into his head for seven times; when you utter this, then (19) his ears speak. If his two ears speak, he is very good; if it be his right ear, (20) he is good; if it be his left ear, he is bad.

l. 19. e-hp, probably an unique spelling in demotic instead of the usual e-f hp, for ⲉⲩⲩⲱⲛⲉ.

Pap. Rain. Mitth. ii. 266); gbyr may possibly be connected with għor and with the demotic ligature here; or *hm*r may be the reading of the latter.

l. 22. tp. Two portions of the body are written tp in the demotic of this papyrus. One has the det. of bone as well as that of flesh, and is undoubtedly ταν, 'horn,' Eg. . Without the det. of bone we have the tp of an ass or a hoopoe, which presumably means the head or skull; in other cases, e.g. 19/26, one may doubt whether horn ταν is not intended by the same group.

l. 23. sq, written with the crocodile, presumably = cike; see the verb in BRUGSCH, Rec., iv. Pl. 97, l. 16, and as a participle attached to a word meaning incense, ib., Pl. 85 A, ll. 3, 7, and 11; Pl. 96, l. 6.

eme suggests eme : ame, i. e. 'anise,' or according to some MSS.
'mint,' LORET, Flore Phar., 2nd ed. pp. 53, 71; and it seems possible that the tall dry stalks of the anise (as opposed to the commonly prescribed seeds) should be denoted by h, lit. 'wood.'

l. 24. g^hgⁿtsy with gloss καλακαποι suggests κολοκύνθις; but as the determinative here indicates a mineral and not a plant, it must be intended for χαλκάνθη, 'sulphate of copper,' which is written χαλάκανθον in Leyd. Pap.
X. 1, 3.

l. 25. y^h, 'spirit' of a dead person, or a 'demon': the Gk. δαίμων, which may be good or bad (Pap. Bibl. Nat. passim). On the Bentresh Stela the demon possessing the princess is h.

the gods enter and tell (21) you answer truthfully. You put the shell of a crocodile's egg, or that which is inside it, on the flame; it will be enchanted instantly.

Prescription to make them (22) speak: you put a frog's head on the brazier, then they speak.

Prescription for bringing the gods in by force: you put the bile (23) of a crocodile with pounded frankincense on the brazier.

If you wish to make them come in quickly again, you put stalks (?) of anise (?) on the brazier together with the (24) egg-shell as above, then the charm works at once.

If you wish to bring in a living man, you put sulphate of copper on the brazier, then he comes in.

(25) If you wish to bring in a spirit, you put sa-wr stone with stone of ilkh on the brazier, then the spirit comes in. You put the heart (26) of a hyaena or a hare, excellent (bis).

If you wish to bring in a drowned man, you put sea-karab-stone (?) on the brazier.

(27) If you wish to bring in a murdered (?) man, you put ass's dung with an amulet of Nephthys on the brazier, then he comes in.

If you (28) wish to make (them) all depart, you put ape's dung on the brazier, then they all depart to their place, and you utter their spell of dismissal also.

ylh. The h is written by a sign common enough in other texts, but in this MS. found only here, and in 6/20 htn and 23/29 hlby.

l. 26. hsy, 'approved,' 'deified,' as an expression for one drowned or devoured by a crocodile (19/24), cf. Hdt. ii. 90, and note to l. 31.

g^{er}b n y^m, 'sea-karab,' determined as a mineral can scarcely be κάραβος = 'palinurus vulgaris,' unless its shell be treated as such. Cf. καρκινος ποταμιος in Pap. Bibl. Nat. 2458, 2687. In favour of the sense 'crab' or 'crayfish' we might suppose that it was called 'sea-karab' to distinguish it from the καραβος, 'beetle.'

e·r-k šʿne = εκμῆαν-, an isolated instance at present. The following is the απολυσις of the Gk. papyri, B. M. Pap. CXXI. 333.

1. 31. t še-f n ḥsy = σοφ ηρασιε, cf. Sah. αυγε ηρασιε εναγαγησαν I Tim. i. 19, and ἔωκ ηρασιε 'be drowned' (PEYRON). The literal meaning is 'thou shalt cause him to go as one praised (pleasing).' Similarly in I Kham. iv. 9, 14, 20 drowning is expressed by ʿr-f ḥs·t p Rʿ, 'He did that which pleased Re (the sun god).' ḥsy has det. of sun and in some cases the divine det. ¶ prefixed to the word-sign, cf. 15/12. In Gk. our expression is rendered by ἐκθέωσον, 'deify,' or possibly 'consecrate,' which proves that the meaning 'blessed dead,' i.e. 'divinised,' was not yet forgotten: λαβων μυγαλον εκθεωσον πηγαιω υδατι, και λαβων κανθαρους σεληνιακους δυο εκθεωσον υδατι ποταμιω Pap. Bibl. Nat. l. 2455; εασον καλαβωτην εις κρινινον εως αν αποθεωθη B. M. Pap. CXXI. 629; αποθωσον εις [γαλα, &c.] Berl. Pap. I. 5.

ḥsy—as a proper name = Λσιης (SPIEGELBERG, Eigennamen, p. 7*), lit. 'praised' or 'blessed'—is an euphemism for 'drowned.' No other meaning is ascertained in demotic for the word as subst.; and that it

We may thus be sure of its meaning in l. 26 q. v. and in l. 35, as well as in the numerous parallels to the passage here under discussion. Applied to Osiris, also, the word 'drowned' is quite appropriate, see 6/12.

This leaves φωξ unaccounted for, but a nominative (and from its termination it could be nothing else) is out of place here, so that the corruption must in any case be rather extensive. I do not think anything but επιταγαιην can be read in l. 19. Probably επιταγή is meant.' The word ψυχαγωγου is probably to be taken as associated with the idea of necromancy.

gm-k-ysw, an extraordinary form; but, it is to be feared, no guide to the real pronunciation, which was probably gemyoks or gemyoksu; the written y is thus superfluous, cf. 3/9 note, or at least misplaced.

s-qlm, see note in glossary. 'The place of the garland-seller': does this mean his shop or his garden?

ty-sw: the regular form in this papyrus, as it were, *ⲧⲏⲥⲟⲩ. In gm-k-ysw, above, the sw = Eg. st, plur. of the absolute object-pronoun. Here, after the infinitive, it is abnormal, the s being inserted before the proper suffix -w on false analogy. In Coptic (St., § 342, p. 169, and PIEHL, A. Z., 95. 42) the only clear instance of this false form seems to be Sah. ⲉⲓⲁⲓⲥⲟⲩ. The similar ⲧⲉⲛⲛⲟⲩⲥⲉ, ⲧⲉⲛⲛⲟⲩⲥⲟⲩ, &c., are also etymologically wrong, but they seem to be helped by the causative with stm-f: see GRIFF., High Priests, p. 85.

l. 26. y/l: ⲓⲁⲗ : ⲉⲓⲁⲗ probably to be connected with ύαλος.

The ointment which you put on your eyes when you are about to inquire of the lamp in any lamp-divination: you take some flowers (25) of the Greek bean; you find them in the place of the garland-seller, otherwise said of the lupin-seller; you take them fresh and put them (26) in a lok-vessel of glass and stop its mouth very well for twenty days in a secret dark place. After twenty days, if you (27) take it out and open it, you find a pair (?) of testicles in it with a phallus. You leave it for forty days and when you take it out (28) and open it, you find that it has become bloody; then you put it on a glass thing and put the glass thing into a pottery thing (29) in a place hidden at all times. When you desire to make inquiry of the lamp with it at any time if you fill your eyes with this (30) blood aforesaid, and if you go in to pronounce a spell over the lamp you see a figure of a god standing behind (?) the lamp, and he speaks (31) with you concerning the question which you wish; or you lie down and he comes to you. 'Approved,' 'praised' would be a rather unexpected term to apply to Osiris himself, though it could be explained as equivalent to mꜣ ḥrw and 'deified.' The sense 'drowned' is quite applicable, as Osiris' body was at least sunk in the waters, cf. the text of Ptah published by BREASTED, A. Z., 1901, Pl. II, ll. 19, 62; and this sense is implied in Brit. Mus. Pap. XLVI. 259-63 οστα Εσιηους . . . τον Εσιη (ΖΑCΙΕ) τον ενεχθεντα εν τω ρευματι του ποταμου for three days and three nights. The snake as word-sign has six loops here and in 21/4, four loops in l. 16. This agrees with the snake determinative of šꜣy which has usually four loops, once (19/12) six loops, and twice (3/3, 5/9) two loops, and Shoi is said to be 'in Nun' 2/5. It is thus the snake of Shay. But the sign, meaning distinctly a (sacred) snake, cannot read šꜣy, which always means distinctly a divinity. Hfe is perhaps the most probable reading, see esp. 21/4; the det. of that word in 9/20 has only two loops, but in Louvre dem. Mag. iii. 9 five or six loops. Syt 14/3, V. 27/1 has four loops, but the head seems to be raised high; syt is derived from Eg. sꜣ-tꜣ which is represented by  in late texts, Br., Dict. Geogr., 762.

l. 16. bre: cf. ḥwpe, 'intumescere,' ḥope, 'fastuose se gerere,' or better ḥepi, 'juvenis.'

ʿnh is evidently the serpent word met with in 1/3. Possibly both bre and ʿnh are adjectives, and the construction may resemble the familiar Coptic construction with adjectives, St., § 187.

t-wn, apparently an unetymological spelling for πτορνου: cf. 18/21.

l. 23. a mr·t in the Khamuas stories means 'on board ship' (High Priests, p. 98), but ⲉⲙⲣ in Coptic is 'across,' 'to the other side,' 'beyond.' a mr n may be 'beyond' as a preposition; the same word is used in 15/12 in the same connexion (with the tomb of Osiris at Abydos).

l. 24. e·r-k. The gloss is certainly ⲉⲣ, and must be a correction.

swt is difficult to understand. The idea must be founded on the use of knots in magic, Lat. 'ligatura.'

z^cl-mt·t probably = 'word-seeking,' from Eg. z^cr, preserved also in ⲭⲙⲣ, &c. Were all these used at once, or were they alternatives?

l. 26. wnte: cf. LANZ., Diz. Mit., 165, or better BRUGSCH, Wtb. Suppl., 322. It would be possible to read ḥwnte. From the next line the wnte would seem to be souls in torment or else punishing demons.

l. 27. spe-w, see Glossary, s.v. sp^cl.

The Good House is the place of embalming, GRIFF., High Priests, p. 25; but the presence of a plant det. no doubt indicates that it is a plant-name here. Ḥt might then be εγκαρδιον, as a botanical term 'core.' More probably the whole expression 'heart of the Good House' is to be taken as the name of a symbolical plant, such as the 'resurrection' plant, Anastatica hierochuntina, or something similar. Cf. the story of the flower enclosing the heart of Bata put in a cup of

This passage to the end of the column is repeated in 27/1-12.

l. 23. hty hn[t]. The parallel 27/2 gives in hieratic ht followed by the nose hnt and the det. of a boat. ht means 'float down the river,' 'go north,' and hnt, 'sail up the river,' 'go south.' With this clue it is easy to read in LEEMANS' facsimile the verb hty in demotic, written as in the word mhty, V. 1; with its proper det. of water, and following it the verb hnt, also in demotic, with its proper det. the boat. Thus, though LEEMANS' facsimile cannot be confirmed owing to the wear of the papyrus, it is clear that we have a compound expression hty-hnt, 'go down and up.' This is the proper order for the two verbs, as is shown by hn m hd m hnt, 'rowing to and fro,' in the Westcar Papyrus, V. 4. It of course refers to the sinking to the horizon and rising to the zenith of the sun-boat.

l. 15. ʿmʿm. Cf. 13/11, 13, and in cipher  24/34, V. 32/2. This must be the shrew-mouse. Here it appears connected with Letopolis, where the shrew-mouse was sacred to the blind Horus (RENOUF, P. S. B. A., viii. 155). In 13/11 the animal is prescribed to produce blindness, and in 13/12 and 24/34 it produces death in a man, and in V. 32/2 erotic feeling in a woman. The ʿmʿm, with determinative of an animal, is prescribed in Pap. Eb. 91/10; and in Pap. Kah. 7/9 the remains of a determinative will suit very well the picture of a mouse. It is curious that the cipher writing yielding  (which is certainly the same creature, cf. 13/19-21 with V. 32) makes its name almost identical with Sah. , which in Sap. 12/8 corresponds to σφηκες of LXX. In Coptic, however, the shrew-mouse is  :  (PEYR., Lex. and Gramm.). The μυγᾶλος (sic) is prescribed several times in Pap. Bibl. Nat. in ἀγωγαί.

Shym (Бот-шйм) and ʿy.t are both names of Letopolis in the Delta. The last group in the line looks like ʿl, but is probably intended for wʿl.

1. 26. The pa is for πα-. περο in O. C. Par. corresponds to p pr-ʿo in 21/2. So also we have in B. M. Pap. XLVI, l. 113 εγω ειμι αγγελος του φαπρω οσοροννωφρις, 'of Pharaoh Osoronophris,' where φαπρω = our p pr-ʿo. Undoubtedly the initial letter of pr-ʿo had already been lost by assimilation to the article. The tautology of του φα- is precisely the same as in Αμενωφρις του Πααπιος, 'Amenophis, son of Hapis,' in JOSEPHUS, Contra Ap. i. 26.

. . . . š. The only kings whose names end in š are Darius, Xerxes, Artaxerxes, and the native Khebbesh. Of these Darius is doubtless the name to be restored here; cf. Diod. Sic. i. 95, and for his reputation as a magician in particular, μαγικων διδασκαλος, PORPHYRY, de Abstin., iv. 16. That kings, as well as aspirants to the throne, used these arts is suggested by the spell 'of Rameses III' being given to the herdsman Penhuyban in order to give him 'valour and respect.' See note to l. 17 above.

Aromata, p. 33, and LEMM., Kopt. Apocr. Apostelacten (Mél. Asiat. t. x. p. 351). It occurs in magic prescriptions, Leyden Pap. W. i. 16, ix. 10. The demotic group hb corresponding to it is strange in form and difficult to read: there seems to be a gap between the r and the measure.

Graphically $\odot$, $\odot$ (fem.) are hieroglyphic equivalents of the demotic for $\kappa\iota\tau\epsilon$, 'didrachma,' but from 24/15, 18 the former should be a small multiple of the latter. $\sigma\tau\alpha\tau\eta\rho$ (Copt. $\sigma\alpha\tau\epsilon\rho\epsilon$, fem.) is common as a weight = 'tetradrachma,' in Ptolemaic and Roman papyri.

17. The Hebrew log is .56 litre, about one pint, and the Coptic $\lambda\omicron\kappa$ translates $\kappa\omicron\tau\upsilon\lambda\eta$, which in all its varieties is no larger than a pint.

to apparently as p tbt, 'the fish'; and in l. 31 is written with the fish sign, but with feminine article and termination. It seems characteristically female, the gender of the pronoun changing to fem. ungrammatically immediately after the masculine tbt, in l. 9, and no doubt it was sacred to some goddess. The lates niloticus (which according to MM. Lortet and Hugounenq is found of all sizes mummified at Latopolis, and is therefore the Latus, Ann. du Serv. iii. 15) is called in Arabic qīšr, قشّر.

The former being also known as Αφροδιτης στεφανος, herba venerea (ib.), is very appropriate for this ἀγωγή. It may be mentha sylvestris, and the second species is nasturtium (SPRENGEL). Unfortunately the determinative is lost of our word, so that we cannot be sure that a plant was intended: cf. V. 13/7.

1. 9. ꜥꜣꜣꜣ is probably the true native pronunciation of the word for gum, unaffected by the Greek.

1. 10. twt (?). The determinative of a star must mean that the planet form Ḥr-p-k, a bull-headed man standing with was-sceptre, is intended, Br., Thes., p. 68. With regard to the reading, the sign is the det. of twt in Bul. Pap. I. Pl. 37, l. 14, and in l. 15 stands for twt. Twt, 'figure,' seems to be the reading here, and wherever it occurs with the det. of divinity (15/10, &c.); but without det. (16/22, &c.) it means 'style,' 'method,' and is probably to be read ky. Max Müller, however (Rec. trav. ix. 26), shows reason for reading it qte, comparing Louvre dem. Mag. v. I, vi. 19; qte, though apparently masc., may be the origin of the fem. ꜥꜣꜣꜣ.

1. 11. ḥyn-w ꜣꜣꜣꜣ, some water: cf. 21/13 ḥyn-w 'rt:t.

l. 15. The word for bath is determined with the sign of fire: its name in Coptic is ⲥⲓⲟⲟⲩⲏⲉ: ⲥⲓⲉⲱⲟⲩⲏⲏ with variations; in the demotic there is no trace of the ⲡ, and it evidently means 'place of washings,' ce-ⲥⲓⲟⲟⲩⲏⲉ*.

'You gild and embalm its tail' is perhaps the meaning.

1. 18. s'c'py. The finger is always thus elaborately described in the pap., the blood being used in erotica as here 15/4, 22, V. 32/7. It is evidently the Boh. ceλoσnyu. الخنصر 'middle finger' in KIRCHER. But Sah. ceλemny is 'heart,' also ὑποχόνδρια (cf. 21/25, 33); and that a nerve connected the third (ring-) finger of the left hand with the heart is said put it in a gold ring (?), (16) you put it on your finger after reciting these charms to it, and walk with it to any place, and any woman whom you shall take hold of, she [giveth herself(?)] unto you. (17) You do it when the moon is full. If you do it to make a woman mad after a man, you take its body, dried, you pound [it, you] take (18) a little of it with a little blood of your second finger, (that) of the heart (?), of your left hand; you mix it with it, you put it (19) in a cup of wine; you give it to the woman and she drinks it; then she has a passion for you. You put its gall into a (measure of) wine (20) and the man drinks it; then he dies at once; or (you) put it into any piece [of food]. You put its heart (?) into a seal-ring (?) (21) of gold; you put it on your hand, and go anywhere; then it brings you [favour, love, and] reverence. You drown a hawk in (22) a (measure of) wine; you make the man drink it, then he dies. You put the gall of an Alexandrian [weasel] into any food, (23) then he dies. You put a two-tailed lizard into the oil and [cook] it, and anoint the man with it; then [he dies (?)]. (24) You wish to produce a skin-disease on a man and that it shall not be healed, a hantous-lizard [and (?)] a hafleele-lizard, you cook them with [oil (?)], (25) you wash the man with them. If you wish to make it troublesome (?), you put, then it is troublesome (?). You put beer (?) (26) to the eye of a man, then he is blinded.

l. 20. hr ⲁⲧⲉϥ. It is very interesting to obtain the slm-f form following hr; but whether it would be ⲁⲧⲟϥ or ⲁⲧⲁϥ in Sah. may be a little doubtful. The vowel seems however to represent ε, not α, and should therefore correspond to α, not ο, in Sah.; but a Sah. form ⲁⲧⲉϥ, or even ⲁⲧⲏϥ, would be conceivable.

l. 21. l over the line seems to be a correction of hr.

l. 2. The mark over sp occurs also in 29/22 and V. 9/8. In 29/22 it is placed over sp without any number following, in the other instance over a blank space where a numeral would be expected. Here a number has been written under sp, but below the line, as if inserted later, and the inference may be drawn that the sign in question indicates that a number is wanting.

l. 3. Ham-o might mean 'great carpenter,' but many Egyptian words in these magic names are no doubt almost meaningless, and it is difficult in translating to decide whether to give English equivalents or to transcribe them phonetically.

nta would mean 'that I may,' the demotic equivalent of which is usually written nte-y, though the y was not pronounced. Here we have nte alone written, unless the group be read nte-w 3rd pl., which would give the meaning 'that the god may be seen.'

l. 6. n-ne-zz-y: the n is a doubling of the initial.

'That I may see the god every time I open my eyes(?).' e-r-y is only past relative in ordinary demotic, but in early demotic is often future. Possibly it retains this meaning here, but if so it is a very exceptional usage.

Arian is repeated three times, each time with a different epithet, but the reading of the second is uncertain: it might mean 'this bringer of prosperity.'

figure of a Captain of the host, very valiant, this (11) Sword (?), this Overthrower (?), the Great Flame is my name. I am this figure of Horus, this Fortress (?), this Sword (?), this (12) Overthrower (?) is my name. I am this figure of One Drowned, that testifieth by writing, that resteth on the other side (?) here under (13) the great offering-table (?) of Abydos; as to which the blood of Osiris bore witness to her (?) name of Isis when it (the blood) was poured into (14) this cup, this wine. Give it, blood of Osiris (that ?) he (?) gave to Isis to make her feel love in her heart for him (15) night and day at any time, there not being time of deficiency. Give it, the blood of N. born of N. to give it (16) to N. born of N. in this cup, this bowl of wine to-day, to cause her to feel a love for him in her heart, (17) the love that Isis felt for Osiris, when she was seeking after him everywhere, let N. the daughter of N. feel it, (18) she seeking after N. the son of N. everywhere; the longing that Isis felt for Horus of Edfu, (19) let N. born of N. feel it, she loving him, mad after him, inflamed by him, seeking him (20) everywhere, there being a flame of fire in her heart in her moment of not seeing him.'

(21) Another method of doing it again. The paring (?) of your nail's point (?) from an apple-fruit (?), and blood (22) of your finger aforesaid again; you pound the apple and put blood on it, and put it in the cup of wine (23) and invoke it seven times, and make the woman drink it at the moment named.

l. 21. znf: an obscure word; cf. 25/32, V. 7/1. It occurs also in a Philae inscription (Br., Thes., 1017), perhaps with the meaning of a 'small portion.'

prw: cf. perhaps Sah. εἱρα, pl. εἱριτε. It is not clear whether the fruit or the pips are intended.

1. 25. The Greek formula, ll. 25-28, is translated into demotic in ll. 29-31.

ανοχ, &c. This passage invites interpretation as Old Coptic, but if it really meant anything it must be corrupt, and the demotic version in l. 29 renders it phonetically as if it consisted of magic names. One may perhaps suggest ʾnk pe pa p nt ʿo my t wʿb n-s, 'I am the servant of him that is great; give discharge (ⲁⲁⲧⲟⲩⲃⲟ) (of the fault or the liability) to her' (sic for 'to me'?).

1. 26. ταφην. At this time ταφή in Egypt = 'mummy,' as is seen by the mummy tickets (Pap. Rainer Mitth. V. 14).

Its invocation in Egyptian also is this as below: (29) 'Do not pursue me, N., I am Papipetu Metubanes. I am carrying the mummy of Osiris, (30) I am proceeding to take it to Abydos, to cause it to rest in Alkhah. If N. fight with me to-day, (31) I will cast it away.' Say seven times.

l. 27. ταστας: an unknown name. This phrase is not translated in the demotic.

[α]λ*χας*: the λ is sufficiently recognizable in the facs.; see the note on 1/16. The ς of κοπους is likewise seen in the facs.

εαν μοι, &c. WÜNSCH, in the Supplement on magic tablets to the Corp. inscript. Attic., quotes in his preface an inscription from the Collections du mus. Alaoui I. p. 57 (publ. also MASPERO, Et. myth. arch. ii. 297), a Latin eroticon of the 2nd cent. A.D. from Hadrumetum written in Greek characters: 'Si minus descendo in adytus Osyris et dissolvam τὴν ταφήν et mittam ut a flumine feratur. Ego enim sum magnus decanus magni dei Achrammachalala,' i.e. as WÜNSCH says, a sepulcro Osiridis arcam illius eripiet et in Nilum coniciet, idem quod olim Typho fecerat.

You make him (26) open his eyes. You say to him, 'Do you see the light?' When he says to you 'I see the light in the flame of the lamp,' you cry at that moment saying (27) 'Heoue' nine times. You ask him concerning everything that you wish after reciting the invocation that you made previously before Phre in the morning. (28) You do it in a place with (its) entrance open to the East, and put the face of the lamp turned (blank). You put the face of the boy (29) turned (blank) facing the lamp, you being on his left hand. You cry down into his head, you strike his head with your second finger, (that) of the . . . , of your (30) right hand.

You recite these things down into the head of the boy, he looking (16) towards the lamp. Do not let him look towards another place except the lamp only; if he does not look towards it, then he is afraid. (17) You do all these things, you cease from your inquiry, you return, you make him close his eyes, you speak down into his head this other (18) invocation which is below, that is, if the gods go away and the boy ceases to see them: 'Arkhe-khem-phai, Zeou, (19) Hele, Satrapermet, watch this boy, do not let him be frightened, terrified, or scared, and make (20) him return to his original path. Open Teï (the Underworld), open Taï (Here).' I say it that this vessel-inquiry of the lamp is better (21) than the beginning. This is the method again; its form: you take a new lamp in which no minium has been put and you put a wick of (22) clean linen in it; you fill it with genuine clean oil; you place it on a new brick, you make the boy sit on another brick (23) opposite the lamp; you make him shut his eyes, you recite down into his head according to the other method also.

Another invocation which (24) you recite towards Phre in the morning three times or seven times. Formula: 'Iotabao, Sokh-ommoa, Okh-(25)-okh-Khan, Bouzanau, Aniesi, Ekomphtho, Ketho, Sethori, (26) Thmilaalouapokhri may everything succeed that I shall do to-day,' and they will (?) succeed. If it be that you do not apply (?) purity to it, it does not succeed; its chief matter is purity.

Another (27) invocation like the one above again. Formula: 'Boel,' (thrice), 'I, I, I, A, I, I, I, A, Tat (thrice), he who giveth the light exceedingly, the companion of the flame, he of the flame which does not (28) perish, the god who liveth, who dieth not, he who sitteth in the flame, who is in the midst of the flame who is in the lake of heaven, in whose hand is the greatness and might (29) of the god, reveal thyself to

(1) [Spell] spoken to the sting : (2) 'I am the King's son, eldest and first, Anubis. My mother Sekhmet-Isis(?), she came (?) after me (3) forth to the land of Syria, to the hill of the land of Heh, to the nome of those cannibals, saying, (4) "Haste (bis), quick (bis) my child, King's son, eldest and first, Anubis," saying, "Arise and come (5) to Egypt, for thy father Osiris is King of Egypt, he is ruler over (6) the whole land; all the gods of Egypt are assembled to receive the crown from his hand." (7) The moment of saying those things she brought me a blow (?),

H. N., 6. 35 ad fin. Northward, Anthropophagi were placed in Syria, ib. 7. 2, or in Parthia (ROBINSON, Apocr. Gosp., p. 23, and Preface): cf. Rec. tr., xxv. 41. The land of Hah (Millions) is not known.

l. 5. a n Kmy . . . a p t must be for n Kmy . . . n p t. Possibly the Faiyumic pronunciation ε for ñ has produced this exceptional writing.

l. 7. The following may be suggested as an alternative translation for this difficult passage: 'At the moment when she said this, a wasp (?) flew to me, my spittle (?) fell down upon me (from fright); it (the wasp) drew near (or gathered itself together) to me, coming unto me with a sting.' Here a're-s is taken as a relative attached to z as regularly in other demotic texts (I Kham. v. 1, &c.); the n before fks.t is omitted. fy is taken in the sense of 'fly' (see GRIFF., H. Priests, p. 178, note to l. 19), and fks.t as possibly an Egyptian rendering of σφιγξ. The Coptic ϣορκας, meaning an aquatic (?) animal of some kind, can hardly be the same word for phonetic reasons; for the form of the f see l. 21. The word recurs in 21/7.

nmte.t as 'power' = noet†: this makes no sense. Cf. Kufi, xii. 30, 'he swallowed his nmty.t' (of the monkey when terrified).

1. 10. ls·t-k. This form seems due to a confusion in endeavouring to write in archaic style. The t is quite unwarranted by Egyptian. We may compare the t added before the object pronouns following stm-f: cf. also note to l. 20. We have here a passage in which very modern forms ⲁⲡⲁⲙⲧⲟ ⲉⲃⲟⲗ are mixed with older forms ḥms ʾS·t (past stm-f) and this ls·t-k.

1. 12. nmte·t: if this means 'tail' we may compare Pist. Sophia, p. 323 ⲧⲧⲁⲡⲣⲟ ⲁⲡⲉⲥⲁⲧ, 'the point of the tail of the dragon.'

bn p·y: the Achmimic vetitive ⲁⲡ=ⲁⲡⲣ, cf. 21/23, probably derived from the old vetitive m. It occurs in Eg. as bn, Pap. Mag. Harris 8/7.

fell my tail (?) upon me. (8) It (?) gathered together (?), it (?) coming to me with a sting (?): I sat down and (9) wept. (14) And you lick it with your tongue, while it is bleeding, immediately; thereafter, you recite to a little (15) oil and you recite to it seven times, you put it on the sting daily; you (16) soak a strip of linen, you put it on it.

l. 17. pʿge: the word has been extensively corrected; p, originally ʾ, and g and e being written above the line—see the facsimile.

l. 18. tyt = τοιτ, plangere. The songs at funerals both in ancient and modern Egypt are in praise of the deceased, so the word may really mean, or at least imply, 'pronounce eulogy.'

l. 21. nhe n sym = ηεζ ηεια, i. e. ῥαφάνιον, Diosc. i. 45 and Peyr. Lex. fty, cf. 21/16, is the reading = ϣωτε, not šty, 𐤥𐤔𐤕. For the form of š in this papyrus see šty in 19/7, 8; f over another sign has the tail very short.

be left out of the question, the fact that both in 21/27 and 21/41 š is written over ne, as if by an afterthought, suggests that ne, which is identical in spelling with na the auxiliary of the future, must be the verb na, 'go' (attaching itself to nos : nosī, 'futurus esse'), as opposed to nnos, 'come' (which is qualitative of ei; see KABIS, A. Z., 75. 107). na is practically the qualitative of ye (STERN, § 348). The correction of ne to š in both passages would therefore be particularly remarkable. Although, according to STEINDORFF, § 251, the qualitative is admissible in the conjunctive it seems difficult after yante : hence no doubt the correction; but if it be possible, the meaning would be 'until she be going,' while š expresses 'until she go.' It would seem that the scribe was puzzled by the ne, hence the mistakes and corrections. The following table of forms of the verbs 'come' and 'go' may be useful:—

	Inf.	Inf.	Qual.	Stm-f.
'go'	Copt. ye : yey	nos : nosī , na-	na	(τ)εππο(οτ)?
	Dem. š	n' ne-	ne (?)	n'-f
'come'	Copt. ei : i	—	n-nos	(τ)απο

But more probably it is the μελίκητον, 'honey and water,' of Hipp., Aph. v. 41 &c.; cf. also γλυκὴ κρητικόν, GALEN, de Antid. i. 12, &c., 'liquorice.'

l. 9. Hyoscyamus, henbane, Diosc. iii. 69, used as hypnotic, &c., Brit. Pharm.

l. 10. κισσος, Diosc. ii. 210.

l. 11. a ḥ: a curious usage.

mt-t rm-rḥ: cf. I Kham. iv. 37.

l. 12. The meaning may be that you take each of the four ingredients separately and soak it in wine. Perhaps the four uteh of wine make the lok.

1 ounce, (9) hyoscyamus, 1 ounce, (10) ivy, 1 ounce; (11) you pound them like (sic) a lok-measure of wine. If you wish to do it cleverly (?) (12) you take four portions to each one of them with an uteh of wine, (13) you moisten them from morning to evening; you clarify them, (14) you make them drink it; very good.

Another, the fourth (?) :—pips (?) [of ?] (15) apple, 1 stater (?), 1 kite, pound with flour. (16) You make it into a cake (?); you make the man eat it, whom you wish.

(17) A medicament for making a man sleep; very good :—(18) pips (?) of apple, 1 stater (?), 1 drachma, mandragora root, 4 drachmas, (19) ivy, 4 drachmas; pound together; you put fifteen (20) uteh of wine to it; you put it into a glass glyt; (21) you keep it. If you wish to give it, you put a little into a cup of wine, (22) you give it to the man.

Ivy: it grows in gardens; (23) its leaf is like the leaf of shekam, being divided into three lobes (24) like a vine-leaf; it (the leaf) is one palm in measurement; its blossom (25) is like silver—another says gold.

Another: gall of an Alexandrian weasel, (26) you add it to any food.

Another: a two-tailed lizard.

(27) A medicament for catalepsy (?): gall of cerastes, pips (?) of western apples, herb of klo, (28) pound them together; make into a pill, put (it) into the food (?).

l. 26. nle-k seems superfluous, see note on plate.

You do it in a dark place, the door of it (17) opening to the East or the South, and no cellar being underneath it. (18) You do not allow the light to come into the place aforesaid; you purify the said place beforehand. (19) You push the boy's back to the opening of the niche. When you have finished, you recite a charm, (20) bringing your hand over his eyes. A boy who has not yet gone with a woman, (21) is he] whom you make come before you(?); you question him, saying, 'What do you see?' (22) then he tells you about everything that you ask him.

(23) A method to put the heart of a woman after a man; done in one moment(?), and it comes to pass instantly. You take (24) a swallow(?) alive, together with a hoopoe, (both) alive. Ointment made for them: (25) blood of a male ass, blood of the tick(?) of a black cow; you anoint (26) their heads with lotus ointment; you utter a cry before the sun in his moment of rising; (27) you cut off the heads of the two; you take the heart out of the right ribs (28) of both of them; you anoint it with the ass's blood and the blood of the tick(?) of a black cow, (29)

l. 21. Read [p] nt e.ʿr-k, which is required by the space and the meaning. ne-t-t-f: either -f must refer to the lamp, or to the action in general, or else it is a slip for -k.

If you wish to do it by yourself alone, (18) you fill your eyes with the ointment aforesaid; you stand up opposite the lamp when alight; you recite to it seven times with your eyes shut; when you have finished, you open (19) your eyes; then you see the gods behind(?) you; you speak with them concerning that which you desire; you ought to do it in a dark place. The invocation which you recite, (20) formula: 'I am Manebai, Ghethethoni, Khabakhel, let me worship thee, the child of Arpithnapira, (21) Pileasa, Gnuriph-arisa, Teni-irissa, Psi, Psi, Irissa, (22) Gimituru-phas-sa, Okmatsisa, Oreobazagra, Pertaomekh, (23) Peragomekh, Sakmeph, come in to me, and inquire for me about the inquiry which I am inquiring about, truthfully without (24) falsehood.' Its spirit-gathering: the ointment which you put on your eyes, when you are about to make any divination by the lamp. (25) You take some flowers of the Greek bean; you find them in the place of the lupin-seller; you take them fresh, (26) and put them into a lok of glass; you close its mouth very carefully for twenty days in a hidden dark place; after (27) twenty days you take it forth, you open it; then you find a pair(?) of testicles and a phallus inside it; you leave it for forty days; and you take it (28) forth; you open it; then you find that it has become bloody; you must put it into some thing of glass, and you put the glass thing into a pottery (thing) (29) in a place hidden at all times. When you wish to make a divination(?) by the lamp with it, you fill your eyes with this blood aforesaid, you proceed to lie down, (30) or you stand opposite the lamp; you recite this invocation aforesaid; then you see the god behind (?) you, while you are standing up or lying down. Excellent (bis) and tried (?). (31) You write this name on the strip of the wick of the lamp in myrrh ink, 'Bakhukhsikhukh,' or, as says another book, 'Kimeithoro Phosse'; (32) this method which is written above is the method of the divination of Manebai. If you wish to do it (33) by inquiry of the lamp, this also is the form, it is also profitable for (?) the divination of Muribai. If you do it (34) by vessel-inquiry of the lamp, you fill the lamp aforesaid on a new brick; you make the boy stand upright (35) before the lamp, he having his face covered; you recite to his head, standing over him, this Greek invocation; when you have finished, you uncover (36) his face, then he answers you truthfully.

Its spirit-gathering: you go to a clean place, you take a vessel of bronze, you wash it with water of natron, you put a lok-measure (5) of oil to it; you place it on the ground; you light a bronze lamp; you put it on the ground by the bronze vessel; (6) you cover yourself with a clean

You take the boy to an upper lofty (21) place, you make him stand in a place where there is a large window before him, its opening looking to the East where the sun shines (22) in rising into it; you paint the boy's eye with the paint which is prescribed for it, you recite to him times or seven times; you stand over him; you make him (23) gaze before the sun when it fills the uzat, he standing upright on a new brick, there being a new linen robe behind him (?), and his eyes being closed; (24) you recite down into his head; you strike on his head with your finger described above; you offer frankincense (?) before him; when you have finished, you make him open his eyes, (25) then he sees the gods behind him (?) speaking with him.

SPRENGEL (Praefat., p. xvi) identifies the προφήται with those of Egypt, but this is perhaps too precise.
1. 9. The grammatical construction seems confused; one would expect εμψαγ or ετεμψαγ, ST., §§ 426, 427. The writer has given the form of the relative ετρωτεα, but has inserted hr, which seems to be an anomaly.

αφροσεληνον = αφροσέληνος, Diosc. v. 158, another name for σεληνίτης λίθος, selenite or foliated sulphate of lime (REUVENS, Lettres, i. p. 51, with reffs.).

11. 14-16. These lines are repeated in V. 13/10-11.

1. 18. ^rsenygnw = αρσενικόν, yellow orpiment, i. e. sulphide of arsenic: cf. Diosc. v. 120. ALEX. TRALL., u. s., p. 632, mentions it in a prescription for gout.

 I am praying (13) for here to-day.’

COL. XXIII.

l. 1. Probably some five or six short lines have completely disappeared before the beginning of the existing fragments of this column.

COL. XXIV.

Following this on LEYDEN, Pl. XIV., there are several scraps of Greek, &c., numbered 1-7. They are written on pieces of papyrus used for patching worn places, and have no necessary connexion with the text.

Preface

This volume of translations of the Greek magical papyri has been a long time in the making. The project began in a planning colloquium at Claremont, California, May 31 to June 4, 1978. At this meeting, a team of scholars resolved to produce this translation volume as part of a research project on the Greek magical papyri, the project as a whole being designed as a contribution to the Corpus Hellenisticum Novi Testamenti.

The translations turned out to be more difficult and time-consuming than had been expected. Since it seemed desirable to expand the Preisendanz collection to include as many newly discovered and newly published magical papyri as possible, the number of papyri increased from 81 to 131. In this respect, the translation volume differs from the Preisendanz volumes. It differs also in that while Preisendanz reproduced only the Greek sections of bilingual Greek-Demotic papyri, this volume includes the full translations of all bilingual texts.

All translations are based on the Greek, Demotic, and Coptic texts. PGM I–LXXXI follow the Preisendanz edition, while PGM LXXXII–CXXX and PDM Supplement follow their critical editions, which are indicated in the notes. Translators were free to make changes in the texts when they thought it necessary; these changes are also indicated in the notes. Where earlier translations exist, they have been consulted, but all the translations included in this volume are new.

Unlike the Preisendanz edition, this new volume does not have an apparatus criticus. Instead, it has notes explaining difficulties in the text and the translation, and notes alerting readers to important information. It has been necessary to limit these notes to a degree which many readers may find drastic, but the team decided not to attempt what could only be a lengthy commentary on the papyri. Instead, they agreed that other research tools should be developed to encourage and assist further research on the papyri. The following research tools are presently being prepared:

1. An index of Greek words is being prepared by Professor Edward O'Neil.
2. A subject index based on the English translation is being worked out by Ms. Marjorie Menaul.
3. A collection of parallels between the magical papyri and early Christian literature is being prepared by the research team. This part of the project is most directly related to the task of the Corpus Hellenisticum Novi Testamenti, namely, the collection of parallels from ancient literature to the New Testament and the other Christian literature up to approximately A.D. 150.

4. A comprehensive bibliography, including editions and investigations of the magical papyri, is being assembled by Professor David Hellholm.

The present volume would not have come about without the generous support of institutions and individuals. The National Endowment for the Humanities has funded the entire venture from the beginning by substantial grants from 1978 to 1983. Without this financial assistance, the project would simply not exist; scholarly team projects of this magnitude cannot live on enthusiasm alone. Apart from the purely financial aspect, the officers of the NEH have helped more than they may realize by their quiet encouragement and confidence expressed over a number of years.

A great deal of assistance also came from the institutions where the project was initiated and where it is now based. These include the Institute for Antiquity and Christianity at Claremont, where the project was based during the years 1977 and 1978, and the Institute for the Advanced Study of Religion at the University of Chicago, where it has been from 1978 to the present. Thanks are especially due to the officers of these institutions, Professors James M. Robinson and James Brashler of the Institute for Antiquity and Christianity; and Professors Joseph M. Kitagawa, formerly dean, and Franklin I. Gamwell, currently dean, of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, as well as to Martin E. Marty, program coordinator for the Institute for the Advanced Study of Religion of the University of Chicago.

The present project could not have succeeded without the unfailing loyalty and generosity of the members of the team, both contributors and consultants. Among these should be named Professors Jan Bergman, Walter Burkert, Franco Maltomini, and P. J. Sijpesteijn. The research specialists of the project, Professor William C. Grese (1977–80), and Mr. Roy Kotansky and Ms. Marjorie Menaul (1980–83), not only helped to carry the burdens of administration and editorship, but made substantial contributions to the project as well. To all of them sincere thanks are due.

Table of Spells

This list of spells presupposes the divisions in the texts and the identification of section titles made by the editor. In the Demotic spells, section titles are sometimes indicated by red lettering (but this is not done consistently). If no titles are given, this fact is stated (No title) and a short description of content is added.

Explanation of References and Textual Signs

PGM I.
262–347

References cited thus refer to translations of the corresponding Greek text of Preisendanz's Papyri Graecae Magicae, with each roman numeral (including those with appended letters, e.g., PGM Va) corresponding to a separate papyrus manuscript. Roman numerals after PGM LXXXI refer to texts whose translations are based on editions published since, and sometimes overlooked by, Preisendanz. The bibliographies of these editions are mentioned in the introductory note (*) to each spell. Arabic numerals usually delineate the compass of individual spells within the papyrus manuscript. The use of the separate designations for each independent spell or charm represents a new feature designed to enable easy identification and ready reference to an individual spell.

PDM xxi. 6–20

References listed thus refer to Demotic (bilingual) spells corresponding to the texts whose editions are listed in the introductory note (*) to each spell. PDM stands for Papyri Demoticae Magicae, referring to this volume and not to be confused with DMP, an abbreviation for Griffith and Thompson, Demotic Magical Papyri, a work often referred to in the notes. Lower-case roman numerals are used simply to avoid confusion with spells labeled PGM. Arabic numerals are used as above.

[PGM XII.
445–48]

PGM references bracketed thus come immediately after references for bilingual Greek sections with the given spell. The references correspond to the appropriate Greek portions in Preisendanz, whose edition contained only the Greek sections of the Greek/Demotic spells. Since this translation volume contains all the Demotic spells, Preisendanz's numbering system is retained, but it is subsumed under the new Demotic collation.

A,b,c

Texts set in roman type represent spells and portions of spells whose original language was Greek.

A,b,c

Texts set with leader dots beneath represent spells and portions of spells whose original language was Demotic (Egyptian).

A,b,c

Texts with a thin underscore represent spells and portions of spells whose original language was Old Coptic. Coptic is found both in the Greek texts of Preisendanz's edition and as glosses in portions of the Demotic/Greek bilingual spells; however, the purely Coptic magical spells form a separate corpus not dealt with in this volume.

- * An asterisk introduces an independent spell or a spell that contains most of the constituent parts necessary to effect the whole charm, though organic connections with adjacent spells can be recognized (e.g., spells entitled “Another . . .,” or the like). The asterisk directs the reader to the contributor, whose name is given at the end of the spell. Some introductory comments may be found here as well. Bibliographical data, if appropriate, may also be listed.
- Tr.: This abbreviation stands for “translator” or “transcriber” (if the text contains no recognizable words that can be translated).
- Victory spell: Phrases set in roman boldface type refer to general titles of charms which usually stand at the beginning of the spell and which are often followed by one or more subtitles. Many spells do not possess a title, either because of a scribal omission or because it has been lost in a lacuna in the text.
- Spell to be spoken* Phrases set in italic boldface type refer to various subtitles and a number of types of rubrics (subsumed under the main title) that function in a titular sense to introduce a component feature of a spell. These may introduce ingredients, additional instructions, invocations, figures, magical names and characters, and so on, which are mentioned in the instructions in the text. In a long, multifunctional spell (cf. PGM IV. 2145–2240 and PGM XIII. 1–343), general titles are subordinate to the larger title, which describes an often elaborate ritual. In description, these general titles are identical to the main titles of most spells but are set as subtitles since they usually depend on a prior set of conditions to guarantee their efficacy.
- IAŌ SABAŌTH
ADŌNAI Small capital letters indicate magical names (voces magicae) which are usually untranslatable and often meaningless to the reader. In some instances, small capital letters preserve recognizable Greek, Egyptian, or Semitic words that merit special attention. Portions of texts whose fragmentary nature precludes the possibility of proper translation, but which may in fact have been readable in the original, are also set in small capitals.
- A diagonal slash indicates every fifth line of translated text, corresponding to the number given in the left-hand margin. Usually these are numbered consecutively until a new papyrus number is introduced.
- 35 [5] A bracketed number alongside the regular number refers to the line number of the original edition (in a Greek/Demotic text). Occasionally at the beginning the column number and line are also cited (e.g., [Col. III,5]).
- 30 (4) A number in parentheses refers to the original line of Preisendanz in a Greek/Demotic spell. The number corresponds to the PGM reference given within the bracketed number at the head of the spell.

- ... An ellipsis in the body of the text refers to a lost portion regardless of the size of the lacuna. Some punctuation (e.g., a comma or a period) may also be added at the end of the ellipsis.
- [spell] Brackets enclosing words indicate that the words are not preserved in the original text. These include (1) suggested restorations of lacunae; (2) editorial expansions of the text to elucidate the sense of the original language; and (3) phrases traditionally set off by pointed brackets ⟨ ⟩, namely, modern corrections to scribal omissions or errors. Scholars interested in determining which use the bracketed text refers to are recommended to consult the texts of the original editions. As a general rule, bracketed texts will not divide a word, but will surround the whole word if its reading is fairly uncertain.
- (add the usual) Parentheses enclosing words simply indicate material in the original texts best understood as parenthetical comments of the ancient authors and redactors.
- “Come to me . . .” Quotation marks enclosing words indicate material that is spoken (or intended to be spoken) or written (or intended to be written). Material not enclosed in quotation marks usually refers to parts of a formulary that contain instructions and directions apart from the material to be written or spoken. Such instructions are peculiar to the papyri that have preserved magical formularies, whereas the actual amulets and phylacteries found on papyrus usually contain simple invocations that have been transcribed as a result of following the instructions in such magical handbooks.
- Incantations originally written in Greek meter are set as verse, that is, they are indented en bloc, with the first letter of each line capitalized. In cases where the meter falters within such a hymnic portion, the original margin is restored to indicate prose.
- NN In the magical formularies, this abbreviation stands for a name or names to be inserted by the reader, the names of the persons against or for whom the magic is to be carried out. In the case of “(the) NN matter,” the reader understands that specific requests are to be named at this point.
- [R.K.R.] At the end of each footnote, the bracketed initials refer to the contributing scholar responsible for the material immediately preceding. Notes that carry no initials represent the joint efforts of the contributors and scholars.

Introduction to the Greek Magical Papyri

Hans Dieter Betz

"The Greek magical papyri" is a name given by scholars to a body of papyri from Greco-Roman Egypt containing a variety of magical spells and formulae, hymns and rituals. The extant texts are mainly from the second century B.C. to the fifth century A.D. To be sure, this body of material represents only a small number of all the magical spells that once existed.¹ Beyond these papyri we possess many other kinds of material: artifacts, symbols and inscriptions on gemstones, on ostraka and clay bowls, and on tablets of gold, silver, lead, tin and so forth.²

I

The history of the discovery of the Greek magical papyri is a fascinating subject.³ We know from literary sources that a large number of magical books in which spells were collected existed in antiquity. Most of them, however, have disappeared as the result of systematic suppression and destruction. The episode about the burning of the magical books in Ephesus in the Acts of the Apostles (Acts 19:10) is well known and typical of many such instances. According to Suetonius,⁴ Augustus ordered 2,000 magical scrolls to be burned in the year 13 B.C. Indeed, the first centuries of the Christian era saw many burnings of books, often of magical books, and not a few burnings that included the magicians themselves.

As a result of these acts of suppression, the magicians and their literature went underground. The papyri themselves testify to this by the constantly recurring admonition to keep the books secret.⁵ Yet the systematic destruction of the magical literature over a long period of time resulted in the disappearance of most of the original texts by the end of antiquity. To us in the twentieth century, terms such as "underground literature" and "suppressed literature" are well known as descriptions of contemporary phenomena. We also know that such literature is extremely important for the understanding of what people are really thinking and doing in a particular time, geographical area, or cultural context. Magical beliefs and practices can hardly be overestimated in their importance for the daily life of the people. The religious beliefs and practices of most people were identical with some form of magic, and the neat distinctions we make today between approved and disapproved forms of religion—calling the former "religion" and "church" and the latter "magic" and "cult"—did not exist in antiquity except among a few intellectuals.⁶

Thus the suppression of this magical literature has deprived us of one of our most important sources of ancient religious life. Modern views of Greek and Roman religions have long suffered from certain deformities because they were unconsciously shaped by the only remaining sources: the literature of the cultural elite, and the archeological remains of the official cults of the states and cities.

But not everything was lost.⁷ At the end of antiquity, some philosophers and theologians, astrologers and alchemists collected magical books and spells that were still available. Literary writers included some of the material in their works, if only to make fun of it. It is known that philosophers of the Neopythagorean and Neoplatonic schools, as well as Gnostic and Hermetic groups, used magical books and hence must have possessed copies. But most of their material vanished and what we have left are their quotations.

The Greek magical papyri are, however, original documents and primary sources. Their discovery is as important for Greco-Roman religions as is the discovery of the Qumran texts for Judaism or the Nag Hammadi library for Gnosticism.⁸

Like these manuscript discoveries, the discovery of the Greek magical papyri was and often still is the outcome of sheer luck and almost incredible coincidences. In the case of the major portion of the collection, the so-called Anastasi collection, the discovery and rescue is owed to the efforts (and, if one may use the term, cooperation) of two individuals separated by more than a thousand years: the modern collector d'Anastasi and the original collector at Thebes.

In the nineteenth century, there was among the "diplomatic" representatives at the court in Alexandria a man who called himself Jean d'Anastasi (1780?–1857). Believed to be Armenian by birth, he ingratiated himself enough with the pasha to become the consular representative of Sweden.⁹ It was a time when diplomats and military men often were passionate collectors of antiquities, and M. d'Anastasi happened to be at the right place at the right time. He succeeded in bringing together large collections of papyri from Egypt, among them sizable magical books, some of which he said he had obtained in Thebes.¹⁰ These collections he shipped to Europe, where they were auctioned off and bought by various libraries: the British Museum in London, the Bibliothèque Nationale and the Louvre in Paris, the Staatliche Museum in Berlin, and the Rijksmuseum in Leiden. Another papyrus was acquired by Jean François Mimaout (1774–1837), also a diplomat, whose acquisition ended up in the Bibliothèque Nationale (PGM III).¹¹ Unfortunately, we know almost nothing about the circumstances of the actual findings. But it is highly likely that many of the papyri from the Anastasi collection came from the same place, perhaps a tomb or a temple library.¹² If this assumption is correct, about half a dozen of the best-preserved and largest extant papyri may have come from the collection of one man in Thebes. He is of course unknown to us, but we may suppose that he collected the magical material for his own use. Perhaps he was more than a magician. We may attribute his almost systematic collections of magica to a man who was also a scholar,¹³ probably philosophically inclined, as well as a bibliophile and archivist concerned about the preservation of this material.¹⁴

Although the person who collected the Anastasi papyri remains unknown, comparable figures are known from later Egyptian literature. In the Demotic Papyrus no. 30646 in the Cairo Museum, there appears Prince Khamwas, the fourth son of King Ramses II and high priest of Ptah in Memphis. This legendary figure belongs to the Stories of the High Priests of Memphis, published by Francis Llewelyn Griffith,¹⁵ stories that in many ways can serve as illustrative companions to the Greek magical papyri. Miriam Lichtheim has given this summary portrait in the third volume of her Ancient Egyptian Literature:

Prince Khamwas, son of King Ramses II and high priest of Ptah at Memphis, was a very learned scribe and magician who spent his time in the study of ancient monuments and books. One day he was told of the existence of a book of magic written by the god Thoth himself and kept in the tomb of a prince named Naneferkaptah (Na-nefer-ka-ptah), who lived in the distant past and was buried somewhere in the vast necropolis of Memphis. After a long search, Prince Khamwas, accompanied by his foster brother Inaros, found the tomb of Naneferkaptah and entered it. He saw the magic book, which radiated a strong light, and tried to seize it. But the spirits of Naneferkaptah and of his wife Ahwere rose up to defend their cherished possession. . . .¹⁶

The collection of the Anastasi papyri, if it was brought together by one person, may have been buried with him, either in his tomb or in the rubble of collapsed buildings. At any rate, when d'Anastasi came to Thebes and the papyri were offered to him, he sensed their value and acquired them, thus saving them from destruction.

It took almost another century, however, before scholars learned to appreciate the value of the papyri and started investigating them. It is noteworthy that the auction catalog of d'Anastasi's collection calls the material simply "fromage mystique."¹⁷ Until the middle of the nineteenth century, the papyri were stored in the museums simply as curiosities.

Scholarly investigations began when the great Dutch scholar Caspar Jacob Christiaan Reuvens (1793–1835) described some of the content of the Leiden papyrus J 395 (PGM XIII) in his Lettres à M. Letronne published in 1830.¹⁸ This work was reviewed almost immediately by the German historian of religion Karl Otfried Müller (1797–1840), who also translated Reuvens's excerpts into German.¹⁹ But Reuvens died before his edition of the Leiden papyri could appear. It was forty years before another Dutch scholar, the Egyptologist Conrad Leemans (1809–93), published the edition (PGM XII, XIII)²⁰ together with a Latin translation (1885).²¹

The first publication, however, is due to the efforts of the British scholar Charles Wycliffe Goodwin (1817–78), who published one of the papyri (PGM V) together with an English translation and commentary for the Cambridge Antiquarian Society in 1853.²² Then the German philologist Gustav Parthey (1798–1872) edited the two papyri from Berlin in 1865 (PGM I, II).²³ A very important new phase began when the Viennese papyrologist Carl Wessely (1860–1931) published in 1888 a transcription of the great magical papyrus of Paris (PGM IV), the London papyrus (PGM V), and the Mimant papyrus (PGM III),²⁴ followed in 1889 by corrections.²⁵ In 1893 both Wessely²⁶ and Frederick George Kenyon (1863–1952)²⁷ independently edited and published the magical papyri of London (PGM VII–X). The last major papyrus was published in 1925 by the Norwegian scholar Samson Eitrem (1872–1966),²⁸ who had acquired in Egypt a valuable magical scroll with many drawings (PGM XXXVI).

With these important publications, the major pieces of the Greek magical papyri known to this period had become available. It seems to have been a suggestion first made by the great scholar of Greek religion, Albrecht Dieterich (1866–1908), that all the available papyri should be published in a handy study edition. But this idea developed only gradually after Dieterich began teaching a seminar on the subject of the magical papyri at the University of Heidelberg in 1905.²⁹

Today it is astonishing to learn that teaching such a seminar at that time was quite a daring enterprise. Magic was so utterly despised by historians and philologists that the announcement of the seminar did not mention the word "magic" but was simply phrased as "Selected Pieces from the Greek Papyri."³⁰

How far the dislike of the magical papyri could go is illustrated by a remark made by Ulrich von Wilamowitz-Moellendorf: "I once heard a well-known scholar complain that these papyri were found because they deprived antiquity of the noble splendor of classicism."³¹

Dieterich,³² however, was at the edge of a wave of interest generated by the new discipline of history of religions. His seminar therefore had a surprising attraction for students, some of whom wrote their dissertations on related subjects and became contributors to the study edition. The plan for such a study edition was seriously threatened by Dieterich's sudden death on 6 May 1908, but the work was taken over by Dieterich's students, foremost of whom was Richard Wünsch, chief editor. Adam Abt, Ludwig Fahz, Adolf Erman, Georg Möller, and other contributors³³ stepped in to carry on the work.

When the body of the material of PGM I–IV was almost ready, World War I broke out and interrupted the work. Wünsch, Abt, and Möller were killed in the war. Despite these terrible losses and the desperate economic situation following the war, the publisher, B. G. Teubner of Leipzig, did not give up the project, but decided to start over. The edition was entrusted to Karl Preisendanz (1883–1968), another of Dieterich's former students.³⁴ Scholars at that time faced difficulties scarcely conceivable to us today, yet they persisted. In addition, a remarkable degree of international cooperation existed among the scholars.³⁵ Sam Eitrem from Oslo and Adolf Jacoby from Luxemburg joined the team, and British, French, and Dutch scholars gave their support to the effort. The Notgemeinschaft der Deutschen Wissenschaft as well as other governmental agencies gave financial support, so that despite all the problems the first volume of the first edition of the Papyri Graecae Magicae could appear in 1928, with a second volume following in 1931.³⁶

While all this was happening, new magical papyri were being discovered and published. A third volume, which was also supposed to contain extensive indexes, therefore became necessary. But this volume never appeared, for World War II broke out.

Despite the war, the work had progressed to the actual production of galley proofs, with the preface dated "Pentecost, 1941,"³⁷ when on 4 December 1943 the publishing house of Teubner in Leipzig was bombed and everything was destroyed.³⁸ Fortunately, however, the galley proofs survived the war and are at present being used by a number of scholars in the form of xerox copies. When Karl Preisendanz, the editor of the first edition and tireless promoter of the study of the Greek magical papyri before and after World War II, died on 26 April 1968, the publishing house of Teubner, which had in part been relocated in Stuttgart, West Germany, decided to bring out a new edition. This new edition was prepared by Albert Henrichs, a papyrologist from Cologne, who has been on the faculty of Harvard University since 1973.³⁹ It appeared in two volumes in 1973–74.⁴⁰ The first volume is mostly a reprint of the first edition, though many corrections have been made. The second volume, however, is considerably different from the first edition. A number of papyri were reedited completely, and the papyri originally planned to appear in vol. III were added so that vol. II of the 1974 edition contains all pieces up to PGM LXXXI. The idea of a third volume containing the indexes was postponed because all indexes would have to be redone in view of the changes and additions in the material.

II

What is the significance of the Greek magical papyri? Scholars since Albrecht Dieterich have consistently pointed out the importance of the Greek magical papyri to the study of ancient religions; thus we can limit ourselves here to a summary of the issues.⁴¹

Historians of religion are intrigued by the Greek magical papyri for a number of reasons. If, as Dieterich rightly says,⁴² the papyri are a depository of a great religious literature over many centuries, the recovery of the sources becomes a task of primary interest. In fact, throughout these sources we find citations of hymns, rituals, formulae from liturgies otherwise lost, and little bits of mythology called historiolae. These older materials are now embedded in a secondary context, but by careful application of the methods of literary criticism they are often recoverable.⁴³

Taken as a whole, the material presents a plethora of interesting problems for modern scholarship. One must realize first that the material assembled under the name Greek magical papyri represents a collection of texts of diverse origin and nature. This collection includes individual spells and remedies, as well as collections made by ancient magicians, from the early Hellenistic period to late antiquity. Since the material comes from Greco-Roman Egypt, it reflects an amazingly broad religious and cultural pluralism. Not surprising is the strong influence of Egyptian religion throughout the Greek magical papyri, although here the texts nevertheless show a great variety. Expressed in Greek, Demotic, or Coptic, some texts represent simply Egyptian religion. In others, the Egyptian element has been transformed by Hellenistic religious concepts. Most of the texts are mixtures of several religions—Egyptian, Greek, Jewish, to name the most important.

The picture presented by the Greek magical papyri has been changed substantially by the inclusion of the translation of the Demotic magical papyri. In Preisendanz's edition, the Demotic material was deleted, even when it occurred in the same papyrus as Greek sections apparently written by the same scribe. The inclusion of the Demotic material in the present translation raises new and intriguing questions regarding the relationship between the Greek texts and the antecedent Egyptian sources. Further studies must clarify the process of transmission and transformation of these texts. Such studies will gain new insights into the complex phenomena of the hellenization of religious traditions. (See also the Introduction to the Demotic texts below.)

Another interesting problem is posed by the fact that this material from Greco-Roman Egypt contains many sections that are Greek in origin and nature.⁴⁴ How did this older Greek religious literature find its way into Egypt? We do not, and probably never shall, know. In this older material, the Greek gods are alive and well. But Zeus, Hermes, Apollo, Artemis, Aphrodite, and others are portrayed not as Hellenic and aristocratic, as in literature, but as capricious, demonic, and even dangerous, as in Greek folklore.⁴⁵ The gods and their activities resemble those in the popular myths and local cults, as reported by mythographers or by Pausanias. Therefore, strange as it may sound, if we wish to study Greek folk religion, the magical papyri found in Egypt are to be regarded as one of the primary sources.⁴⁶

Questions similar to those appropriate to the study of Greek religion must be raised in view of the material (divine names as well as entire passages) that comes from some form of Judaism. Jewish magic was famous in antiquity,⁴⁷ and more sources have come to light in recent years; but the origin and nature of the sections representing Jewish magic in the Greek magical papyri is far from clear. Did this material actually originate with Jewish magicians? How did it get into the hands of the magicians who wrote the Greek magical papyri? What kind of transformation took place in the material itself? If the texts in question come from Judaism, what type of Judaism do they represent?

The historian of religion will be especially interested in the kind of syncretism represented in the Greek magical papyri.⁴⁸ This syncretism is more than a mixture of diverse elements from Egyptian, Greek, Babylonian, and Jewish religion, with a few sprinkles of Christianity.⁴⁹ Despite the diversity of texts, there is in the whole corpus a tendency toward assimilation and uniformity. Such assimilation and uniformity, however, includes primarily the religious traditions already mentioned: the Romans, although in control of Egypt by the time most of the papyri were written, left only a few traces in the material. Thus the papyri represent a Greco-Egyptian, rather than the more general Greco-Roman, syncretism.

In this syncretism, the indigenous ancient Egyptian religion has in part survived, in part been profoundly hellenized.⁵⁰ In its Hellenistic transformation, the Egyptian religion of the pre-Hellenistic era appears to have been reduced and simplified, no doubt to facilitate its assimilation into Hellenistic religion as the predominant cultural reference. It is quite clear that the magicians who wrote and used the Greek papyri were Hellenistic in outlook.

Hellenization, however, also includes the egyptianizing of Greek religious traditions. The Greek magical papyri contain many instances of such egyptianizing transformations, which take very different forms in different texts or layers of tradition. Again, working out the more exact nature of this religious and cultural interaction remains the task of future research.

The papyri also provide many insights into the phenomenon of the magician as a religious functionary, in both the Egyptian and the Hellenistic setting. One must be cautious, however, in making generalizing statements in regard to the figure of the magician in the Greek magical papyri.⁵¹ Some of the magicians writing and using the spells may have been associated with temples of Egyptian and Greek deities. According to Egyptian practice, the magician was a resident member of the temple priesthood. Genuine understanding of the older Egyptian and Greek languages and traditions can be assumed in some of the material, but by no means in all instances.

There are texts reflecting perhaps a different type of magician, a type we know from the Greek religious milieu.⁵² This type of wandering craftsman seems keen to adopt and adapt every religious tradition that appeared useful to him, while the knowledge and understanding of what he adopted was characterized by a certain superficiality. This type of magician no longer understood the old languages, although he used remnants of them in transcription. He recited and used what must at one time have been metrically composed hymns; but he no longer recognized the meter, and he spoiled it when he inserted his own material. In the hands of magicians of this type, the gods from the various cults gradually merged, and as their natures became blurred, they often changed into completely different deities. For these magicians, there was no longer any cultural difference between the Egyptian and the Greek gods, or between them and the Jewish god and the Jewish angels; and even Jesus was occasionally assimilated into this truly "ecumenical" religious syncretism of the Hellenistic world culture.

We should make it clear, however, that this syncretism is more than a hodgepodge of heterogeneous items. In effect, it is a new religion altogether, displaying unified religious attitudes and beliefs. As an example, one may mention the enormously important role of the gods and goddesses of the underworld. The role of these underworld deities was not new to Egyptian religion or, to some extent, to ancient Greek religion; but it is characteristic of the Hellenistic syncretism of the Greek magical papyri that the netherworld and its deities had become one of its most important concerns. The goddess Hekate, identical with Persephone, Selene, Artemis, and the old Babylonian goddess Ereschigal, is one of the deities most often invoked in the papyri. Through the egyptianizing influence of Osiris, Isis, and their company, other gods like Hermes, Aphrodite, and even the Jewish god

Iao, have in many respects become underworld deities. In fact, human life seems to consist of nothing but negotiations in the antechamber of death and the world of the dead. The underworld deities, the demons and the spirits of the dead, are constantly and unscrupulously invoked and exploited as the most important means for achieving the goals of human life on earth: the acquisition of love, wealth, health, fame, knowledge of the future, control over other persons, and so forth. In other words, there is a consensus that the best way to success and worldly pleasures is by using the underworld, death, and the forces of death.

Apart from this fascination with the control of death and the underworld powers, there is an equally important fascination with the universe. The older gods of the Greco-Egyptian pantheon now mostly represent the forces of the universe. Thus the Greek god most often invoked is Apollo Helios, a fact consistent with the enormous expansion of the worship of the sun in the Greco-Roman era. Besides other astral deities such as Selene, the constellation of the Bear, and the like, abstract deities, new and old, demand attention. These abstract deities personify Nature (Physis), Time (Kronos, Chronos), Destiny (the Moirai), and most important, the All (Aion). Popular Egyptian gods and goddesses are, however, called upon just as often. Yet the god most often employed is Iao, the Jewish god.

The people whose religion is reflected in the papyri agree that humanity is inescapably at the whim of the forces of the universe. Religion is nothing but taking seriously this dependency on the forces of the universe. Whether the gods are old or new, whether they come from Egyptian, Greek, Jewish, or Christian traditions, religion is regarded as nothing but the awareness of and reaction against our dependency on the unfathomable scramble of energies coming out of the universe. In this energy jungle, human life can only be experienced as a jungle, too. People's successes and failures appear to be only the result of Chance (Tyche). Individuals seem to be nothing but marionettes at the end of power lines, pulled here and there without their knowledge by invisible forces.

If this world view takes hold of people, what hope can there be for human life? How could ordinary men and women in the small towns of Egypt get something out of their lives? It is at this point that the magician enters the picture. In a transitional culture like Greco-Roman Egypt, a religious functionary who operated as a crisis manager became a necessity to the lives of ordinary people. This role the magician was able to fulfill.

Applying his craft, the magician could give people the feeling that he could make things work in a world where nothing seemed to work the way it used to. He had handbooks of magic,⁵³ which contained the condensed wisdom of the past, wisdom made effective to solve the problems of the present.

The magician claimed to know and understand the traditions of various religions. While other people could no longer make sense of the old religions, he was able to. He knew the code words needed to communicate with the gods, the demons, and the dead. He could tap, regulate, and manipulate the invisible energies.⁵⁴ He was a problem solver who had remedies for a thousand petty troubles plaguing mankind: everything from migraine to runny nose to bedbugs to horse races, and, of course, all the troubles of love and money.

In short, it was this kind of world in which the magician served as a power and communications expert, crisis manager, miracle healer and inflicter of damages, and all-purpose therapist and agent of worried, troubled, and troublesome souls.⁵⁵

To raise one final question: It is one of the puzzles of all magic that from time immemorial it has survived throughout history, through the coming and going of entire religions, the scientific and technological revolutions, and the triumphs of modern medicine. Despite all these changes, there has always been an unbroken tradition of magic. Why is magic so irrepressible and ineradicable, if it is also true that its claims and promises never come true? Or do they? Do people never check up on the efficiency of magicians?

The answer appears to be that, in general, people are not interested in whether or not magicians' promises come true. People want to believe, so they simply ignore their suspicions that magic may all be deception and fraud. The enormous role deception plays in human life and society is well known to us.⁵⁶ In many crucial areas and in many critical situations of life, deception is the only method that really works. As the Roman aphorism sums it up, "Mundus vult decipi, ergo decipiatur" ("The world wishes to be deceived, and so it may be deceived"). To an immeasurable extent, people's lives carry on by what they decide they want to believe rather than by what they should believe or even know, by what appears to be real rather than by what is really real, by props and by fads, and by gobbledygook of this kind today and that kind tomorrow.

Magicians are those who have long ago explored these dimensions of the human mind. Rather than decrying the facts, they have exploited them. Magicians have known all along that people's religious need and expectations provide the greatest opportunity for the most effective of all deceptions. But instead of turning against religion, as the skeptics among the Greek and Roman philosophers did, the magicians made use of it. After all, magic is nothing but the art of making people believe that something is being done about those things in life about which we all know that we ourselves can do nothing.

Magic is the art that makes people who practice it feel better rather than worse, that provides the illusion of security to the insecure, the feeling of help to the helpless, and the comfort of hope to the hopeless.

Of course, it is all deception. But who can endure naked reality, especially when there is a way to avoid it? This is why magic has worked and continues to work, no matter what the evidence may be. Those whose lives depend on deception and delusion and those who provide them have formed a truly indissoluble symbiosis. Magic makes an unmanageable life manageable for those who believe in it, and a profession profitable for those who practice the art.

6. A definition of the notion of magic cannot be attempted here. In order to provide an adequate definition, the complexities of the notion, its relations with “religion” and “science,” and the rather frustrating history and literature of the problem would have to be discussed first. For a good introduction to the question, see A. A. Barb, “The Survival of Magic Arts,” in The Conflict between Paganism and Christianity in the Fourth Century, ed. A. Momigliano (Oxford: Clarendon, 1963) 100–125; G. Widengren, Religionsphänomenologie (Berlin: De Gruyter, 1969) 1–19; cf. also Aune, ANRW II. 23.2, 1510–16 and G. E. R. Anastasi, dans ses fouilles à Thèbes avait découvert la bibliothèque d’un gnostique égyptien du second siècle, et une partie de cette bibliothèque avait passé avec sa première collection dans le musée de Leide; c’est de là que venait le fameux texte magique en écriture démotique et deux petits papyrus grecs pliés en forme de livres qui font plusieurs des plus beaux ornements de ce musée.”

12. Cf. the report of another collector who speaks of his "residence of eighteen years at Thebes, entirely devoted to its objects of antiquity" (p. IX). This man, a Greek named Giovanni d'Athanasī, from the island of Lemnos, the son of a Cairo merchant, wrote his story at the suggestion of English travelers: Giovanni d'Athanasī, A Brief Account of the Researches and Discoveries in Upper Egypt, made under the direction of Henry Salt, Esq., to which is added a detailed catalogue of Mr. Salt's collection of Egyptian Antiquities; illustrated with twelve engravings of some of the most interesting objects, and an enumeration of those articles purchased for the British Museum (London: John Hearne, 1836). As d'Athanasī reports, the papyri are found mostly in or near tombs; so he says about the Demotic papyri: "they are very rare, and are found not in the mummies, but in the terra-cotta urns which are found closed up and buried in the earth around the tombs" (p. 79). See also the Catalogue of the Very Magnificent and Extraordinary Collection of Egyptian Antiquities, the Property of Giovanni d'Athanasī, which will be sold by auction by Mr. Leigh Sotheby, at his house, 3, Wellington Street, Strand, on Monday, March 13th, 1837, and the Six following Days (Sunday excepted), at One o'Clock precisely (London: J. Sohn Ramses' II. und Hoherpriester von Memphis. Ägyptologische Abhandlungen* 27 (Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 1973), esp. 70ff. The papyrus was found in a Christian (!) tomb in Thebes. It should be noted that the story dealing with the search for the secret book has a parallel in Pseudo-Democritus, who may be identical with Bolos of Mendes. According to this text, Democritus went to Memphis where he was received by Ostanēs and his students in the temple of Ptah, but Ostanēs died before he initiated Democritus into his mysteries and handed his secret books over to him. Democritus also brought up the shadow of Ostanēs from Hades and asked him about the books. Ostanēs replied that they were in the temple, where they were finally discovered. Both names occur also in PGM (Democritus: VII.167, 795; XII. 351; Ostanēs: IV.2006; XII.122). The text is given in J. Bidez and F. Cumont, Les mages hellénisés II (Paris: Société d'édition "Les belles lettres," 1938) 317–18; see J. H. Waszink, "Bolos," RAC 2 (1954): 502–8; Speyer, Bücherfunde 26–27, 72–73.

Es nimmt mich immer wieder wunder, dass der unermeßliche Gewinn, der aus den Zauberpapyri nach so vielen Seiten hin zu erlangen ist, nur so wenige Arbeiter lockt. Wie mancher, der religionsgeschichtliche Arbeit tun will, täte besser hier sich zu bemühen als um Probleme herumzureden, zu deren Lösung er doch nichts beitragen kann. Nach dem Schema der 'Papyrologie' gehören sie weder zu den Urkunden noch zu den literarischen Papyri; denn daß sich hier die große religiöse Literatur von Jahrhunderten niedergeschlagen hat, ist nur sehr wenigen deutlich. Die Unbekanntheit mit den magischen Papyri macht sich zum Schaden so mancher religionshistorischer Arbeiten, auch der letzten Jahre, bemerklich, und da die wichtigste Publikation von Wessely in den Denkschriften der Wiener Akademie, philos.-hist. Klasse XXXVI Band 1888, allerdings ohne eigene recensio und emendatio kaum benutzbar ist, habe ich es mit einem meiner Schüler zusammen unternommen, zunächst wenigstens das kapitalste Stück dieser Literatur, das grosse Pariser Zauberbuch, in einer neuen Ausgabe vorzulegen.

Ich habe einmal gehört, wie ein bedeutender Gelehrter beklagte, dass diese Papyri gefunden wären, weil sie dem Altertum den vornehmen Schimmer der Klassizität nehmen. Dass sie das thun, ist unbestreitbar, aber ich freue mich dessen. Denn ich will meine Hellenen nicht bewundern, sondern verstehen, damit ich sie gerecht beurteilen kann. Und selbst Mahadöh, der Herr der Erden,—soll er strafen, soll er schonen, muss er den Menschen menschlich sehn.

How they were made can still be seen from the partly unfinished, late Byzantine (16th c.) copy in the Gennadios Library in Athens (Codex Gennadianus 45), the text of which was published by A. Delatte, "Un nouveau témoin de la littérature magique, le codex Gennadianus 45 d'Athènes," Bulletin de l'Académie royale de Belgique, Classe des lettres, 5^e série, tome 45 (1959): 280–321.

54. As I have tried to show, even the human self was regarded as a daimon which could be handled by the magician in the same way as all the other energies of the universe. See H. D. Betz, "The Delphic Maxim 'Know Yourself' in the Greek Magical Papyri," HR 21 (1981): 156–71.

55. A beautiful testimony of this self-understanding is cited by D. Wildung, Egyptian Saints: Deification in Pharaonic Egypt (New York: New York University Press, 1977) 84–85, where the great magician Amenhotep says about himself:

I am really magnificent among any people, one with a heaving heart when he is looking for a plan in some unknown problem, like one whose heart knows it already; who finds a sentence even if it was found destroyed; master of wisdom, friend of the ruler, who does useful things for the Horus, who makes his monuments splendid in order to cause everybody to remember him forever at the august place. Who guides the ignorant through the events since the primeval times, who shows their place to everybody who forgot about it; useful in his ideas, when he is looking for monuments to make immortal the name of his lord; who relates the proverb and acts with his fingers; leader of mankind, of engaging manners as a pleasant one. Who venerates the name of the king and his power, who praises his Majesty at any time of the day, who is on his guard in all his decisions. . . ."

56. A good illustration of the phenomenon is the social and psychological syndrome called "cognitive dissonance." The syndrome can be observed among persons of strong conviction who, when faced with evidence to the contrary of their convictions ("disconfirmation"), become more intense and close themselves off from their social context, rather than develop doubts about these convictions. See the study by Leon Festinger, Henry W. Riecken, and Stanley Schachter, When Prophecy Fails: A Social and Psychological Study of a Modern Group that Predicted the Destruction of the World (New York: Harper and Row, 1964). The authors of this study themselves may have become another instance of the syndrome: apparently they entered into the project armed with strong convictions about the origins of religion and, without ever becoming suspicious, found nothing but confirmation.

Introduction to the Demotic Magical Papyri

Janet H. Johnson

As important as the Greek magical papyri are to the understanding of Greco-Roman religion, as noted by Betz in his Introduction to the Greek magical texts, their full significance can be perceived only when it is realized that these texts written in Greek are part of a larger corpus that also includes texts written in that stage of the Egyptian language known as “Demotic,” and that the corpus as a whole derives in very large measure from earlier Egyptian religious and magical beliefs and practices. The interrelationship between the Greek and Egyptian aspects of these magical texts is emphasized by the fact that not only did the major find of such texts, the collection of Anastasi noted by Betz, occur in Egypt, in the ancient capital of Thebes (modern Luxor) and include both Greek and Egyptian documents, but it also included documents that were bilingual—some of the spells were written in Greek, others in Egyptian, all within the same texts and all for use by the same magician. Perhaps even more telling is the fact that even in the spells written in Greek, the religious or mythological background and the methodology to be followed to ensure success may be purely Egyptian in origin. Thus it is only with the inclusion of the Egyptian materials together with the Greek, and the study of the complete corpus, that the full ramifications of this extraordinary body of material can be studied and appreciated.

All four of the Demotic magical texts appear to have come from the collections that Anastasi gathered in the Theban area. Most have passages in Greek as well as in Demotic, and most have words glossed into Old Coptic (Egyptian language written with the Greek alphabet [which indicated vowels, which Egyptian scripts did not] supplemented by extra signs taken from the Demotic for sounds not found in Greek); some contain passages written in the earlier Egyptian hieratic script or words written in a special “cipher” script, which would have been an effective secret code to a Greek reader but would have been deciphered fairly simply by an Egyptian.

The longest of the four Demotic texts was at some time torn into two sections (PDM xiv; PGM XIV). The longer second section was acquired by the Leiden Museum of Antiquities in 1828; it now bears number P.Lugd.Bar. J 383 (formerly Anastasi 65). The shorter beginning section was purchased by the British Museum in 1857; it now bears number P.Lond.demor. 10070 (formerly Anastasi 1072). The definitive publication of the two sections, including hand copy, transliteration, and translation, with extensive commentary and glossary, is the work of F. Ll. Griffith and Herbert Thompson.¹ Attention was attracted to the Leiden section very early when Reuvens recognized the value that the glosses into Greek letters provided for the deciphering of Demotic script.² The entire preserved text (both the beginning and the end of the original manuscript are lost) consists of twenty-nine large columns on the recto and thirty-three smaller columns on the verso. All are in Egyptian with the exception of three short passages in three separate columns, which are written in Greek. Elsewhere occasional Greek words occur as glosses to Egyptian words or are written in the Egyptian text in an alphabetic Demotic script apparently developed for writing magical and foreign words. Much more common than the Greek passages is the use of the older Egyptian hieratic script in the midst of Demotic passages (as if the scribe were transcribing from an earlier manuscript and occasionally forgot to update what he was copying) and glosses into Old Coptic, most frequently for the writing of magical names and presumably to indicate proper pronunciation (which would have been very difficult to do given the abbreviated nature and great age of the traditional Egyptian scripts). Each column of the recto is written within a frame of horizontal and vertical lines; chapter or section headings are written in red ink (a tradition in Egyptian literature from Old Kingdom times³). In some cases, the scribes, while writing the body of the text in black ink, left room for the heading to be added later in red ink but failed to do so. Such headings can easily be restored.

The same scribe who wrote the London and Leiden text also wrote a second manuscript in the Leiden Museum (PDM xii; PGM XII) that contains Demotic magical texts—the verso of P.Lugd.Bat.J 384 (formerly Anastasi 75).⁴ Of the nineteen columns of magical spells on the verso, the two columns at the beginning (the left end of the manuscript) are purely Demotic, the following thirteen columns are in Greek (although two headings are written in Demotic), the next two columns are again in Demotic, and the last two columns at the right end of the papyrus are largely in Demotic although they have short passages in Greek cited in the middle. (Note that the papyrus is broken at both ends, so it is impossible to determine how many more columns there were originally and in what language.) Within the Demotic sections of the manuscript are occasional passages written in the earlier hieratic script and in alphabetic Demotic as well as Old Coptic glosses. It appears that this text was written before the London and Leiden text since it is in this text that one can see the development of the Old Coptic script being used for glosses. In the columns at the left end of the papyrus, the Old Coptic glosses were written letter by letter above the corresponding Demotic letter. Since the Demotic runs right to left, the glosses run the same direction. This would have been quite confusing to someone reading what appeared to be Greek, so by the glosses in the second group of Demotic spells, at the right end of the papyrus, the scribe had taken to writing the glosses word for word, left to right, over the appropriate Demotic word. It is this latter system that is found throughout the papyrus of London and Leiden. In Leiden J 384, the scribe did not write within a frame or use red ink for headings. That both the papyri of London and Leiden and Leiden J 384 were written in Thebes, where they were found and sold to Anastasi, is indicated further by the fact that the dialect of Coptic to which the glosses and other alphabetic spellings most closely correspond has been identified as “archaic Theban.”⁵

The British Museum also contains a second bilingual Greek and Demotic magical text (PDM lxi; PGM LXI), P.Brit.Mus. inv. 10588.⁶ The recto contains eight columns of Demotic; two have occasional magical names written in Old Coptic and one has the names of some ingredients written in Greek in addition to two Greek sections within the Demotic. The verso contains two columns of Demotic with occasional Old Coptic and four columns of Greek. The Demotic sections use red ink for chapter headings (italicized in the translations), as in the papyrus of London and Leiden.

The fourth Demotic magical text is P.Louvre E3229 (formerly Anastasi 1061).⁷ The preserved fragments (PDM Supplement) contain seven columns of Demotic on the recto and one column on the verso; the papyrus is broken at both ends. Both the earlier hieratic script and Old Coptic are used, together with the alphabetic Demotic script developed for writing magical names and attested in each of these texts except P.Brit.Mus. inv. 10588. Section headings are written in red ink on the recto (italicized in the translations); the columns on the recto are written within a red frame, as in the papyrus of London and Leiden.

In all four of these texts, all of which can be dated paleographically to the third century A.D. or only slightly later, there is every indication that all the various scripts were written by, and for, the same scribe, a bilingual person equally at home in Egyptian (old, current, and future) and Greek. The contents and the methodology are overwhelmingly Egyptian. Most of the material is completely Egyptian and its origins are easily traceable in earlier Egyptian religious and magical literature. The methods used are likewise standard Egyptian practices. Some of this is indicated in the notes to the translations.

By contrast, Egyptian divinities (in their own names or in the guise of their Greek counterparts) and Egyptian mythological references abound in the Greek texts and Egyptian methodology is also frequent. For example, although threats against gods who might fail to do what one wants go back to the earliest Egyptian religio-magic literature (Old Kingdom Pyramid Texts), but are unparalleled in classical Greece, they are frequent in the Greek magical texts as well as those written in Egyptian. Much of the Egyptian background of the Greek texts has been pointed out in the numerous textual notes added by Robert K. Ritner. The common source of the Greek and Egyptian language texts is also indicated by their frequent use of identical strings of invocation names, including, in addition to Egyptian and Greek divinities, western Asiatic divinities, "abracadabra" names, and what appear to the modern reader as gibberish.

Because the bulk of the texts is written in Greek, and because there are short passages of Greek in some of the Egyptian texts,⁸ it has been suggested that the Egyptian texts are translations from the Greek. But there are passages in Egyptian, written in Old Coptic, within many of the Greek texts and, as indicated above, the religious and magical background of many of the spells, both Greek and Egyptian, is decidedly Egyptian. In discussing the Egyptian texts, Griffith and Thompson concluded: "even where there are reasons for believing that the demotic is a translation from the Greek, the original source, in relation to magic at any rate, was probably Egyptian."⁹ The same may be true for much of the Greek material. One must, at any rate, be leery of overstating the Greek case and attributing too much to Greek influence.

The present collection of all the texts, Greek and Egyptian, in one easily usable volume, points this out conclusively. This will, in turn, allow and encourage the comparative study of the purposes, methods, props, magical names, and the like, of the Greek and Egyptian spells and encourage the study of the antecedents of the material in both cultures. This work will add greatly to our understanding of the cultural milieu in which these magical texts were produced and copied. Thus it is the hope of all those who have collaborated on the production of this volume that it will both further our knowledge of a dynamic period in the history of man and also encourage future study of cultural contact and cross-fertilization.

INCLUDING THE DEMOTIC SPELLS

*[Rite]: A [daimon comes] as an assistant who will reveal everything to you clearly and will be your [companion and] will eat¹ and sleep with you.

Take [together, therefore,] two of your own fingernails and all the hairs [from] your head, and take a Circaean² falcon / and deify it³ in the [milk] of a black [cow] after you have mixed Attic honey with the milk. [And once you have deified it,] wrap it⁴ with an undyed piece of cloth and place [beside] it your fingernails along with your hairs; and take [a piece of choice papyrus], and inscribe in myrth the following, and set it in the same manner [along with the] hairs and fingernails, and plaster / it with [uncut] frankincense [and] old wine.

So, the writing on/[the strip] is: "A EE ĒĒ IIII OOOOO YYYYYY ŌŌŌŌŌŌ." [But write this, making] two figures:⁵

/ And take the milk with the honey⁶ and drink it before the rising of the sun, and there will be something divine in your heart. And take the falcon and set it up as a statue in a shrine made of juniper wood. And after you have crowned the shrine itself, make an offering of non-animal foods and have on hand some old wine. And before you recline, speak directly to the bird itself after you have made / sacrifice to it, as you usually do, and say the prescribed spell:

*The spell of Pnouthis, the sacred scribe, for acquiring an assistant:¹² . . . Pnouthios to Keryx,¹³ a god[-fearing man], greetings. As one who knows, I have prescribed for you [this spell for acquiring an assistant] to prevent your failing / as you carry out [this rite]. After detaching all the prescriptions [bequeathed to us in] countless books, [one out of all . . .] I have shown you this spell for acquiring an assistant [as one that is serviceable] to you . . . for you to take this holy [assistant] and only . . . O friend of aerial / spirits [that move] . . . having persuaded me with god-given spells . . . but [now] I have dispatched this book so that you may learn thoroughly. For the spell of Pnouthis [has the power] to persuade the gods and all [the goddesses]. And [I shall write] you from it about [acquiring] an assistant.

[The] traditional rite [for acquiring an assistant]: After the preliminary purification, / [abstain from animal food] and from all uncleanness and, on whatever [night] you want to, go [up] onto a lofty roof after you have clothed yourself in a pure garment . . . [and say] the first spell of encounter as the sun’s orb is disappearing . . . with a [wholly] black Isis band on [your eyes], and in your right hand / grasp a falcon’s head [and . . .] when the sun rises, hail it as you shake its head [and] . . . recite this sacred spell as you burn [uncut] frankincense and pour rose oil, making the sacrifice [in an earthen] censer on ashes from the [plant] heliotrope. And as you recite the spell there will be / this sign for you: a falcon will [fly down and] stand in front of [you], and after flapping its wings in [mid-air and dropping]

8. The section describes the voyage of the sun god, his changing age, and his journey through the underworld. See E. Hornung, Das Amduat (Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 1963). For the forms of the sun god, see H. Brugsch, Thesaurus Inscriptionum Aegyptiacarum (Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1883) 405–33. [R.K.R.]

9. The reference is to Ra-Atum emerging from the seas of chaos in the primal month and his creation of the gods by masturbation. In the Egyptian view of time this cosmic event occurs continually (δι-ηνεκέως). Cf. also Pritchard, ANET 6. [R.K.R.]

10. Ancient religion knew of a large number of sacred fig trees, but little is known about the one in Heliopolis. The reference may point to another sacred tree as well, such as the šīd tree (see L. Kákossy, “Ischedbaum,” LdÄ 3 [1980]: 182–83) or the tree “in which is life and death” (idem, LdÄ 2 [1977]: 112). Or the tree is the perseu tree sacred to Ra (see Herodotus 2. 73; and LdÄ 3 [1980]: 182–84; Bonnet, RÄRG 83–84, s.v. Darby, Food: The Gift of Osiris 736–40). [R.K.R.]

11. Walking backwards as a magical rite. See PGM IV. 44, 2493; XXXVI. 273.

12. The term refers to an assistant daimon; see Glossary. Pnouthis and Pnouthios refer to the same person.

an oblong stone,¹⁴ it will immediately take flight and [ascend] to heaven. [You] should pick up this stone; carve it at once [and engrave it later]. Once it has been engraved, bore a hole in it, pass a thread through and wear it around your neck. But in the evening, / go up to [your] housetop [again] and, facing the light of the goddess, address to her this [hymnic spell] as you again sacrifice myrrh troglitis¹⁵ in the same fashion. Light [a fire] and hold a branch of myrtle . . . shaking it, [and salute] the goddess.

At once there will be a sign for you like this: [A blazing star] will descend and come to a stop in the middle / of the housetop, and when the star [has dissolved] before your eyes, you will behold the angel¹⁶ whom you have summoned and who has been sent [to you], and you will quickly¹⁷ learn the decisions of the gods. But do not be afraid: [approach] the god and, taking his right hand, kiss him and say these words to the angel, for he will quickly respond to you about whatever you want. But you / adjure him with this [oath] that he meet you and remain inseparable and that he not [keep silent or] disobey in any way. But when he has with certainty accepted this oath of yours, take the god by the hand and leap down, [and] after bringing him [into] the narrow room where you reside, [sit him] down. After first preparing the house / in a fitting manner and providing all types of foods and Mendesian wine,¹⁸ set these before the god, with an uncorrupted boy¹⁹ serving and maintaining silence until the [angel] departs. And you address preliminary (?) words²⁰ to the god: “I shall have you as a friendly assistant, a beneficent god who serves me whenever I say, ‘Quickly, by your / power now appear on earth to me, yea verily, god!’”

And while reclining, you yourself quickly speak about what you propose.²¹ Test this²² oath of the god on [what] you wish. But when 3 hours have passed, the god will immediately leap up. Order the boy to run [to] the door. And say, “Go, lord, blessed god, / where you live eternally, as you will,” and the god vanishes.

This is the sacred rite for acquiring an assistant. It is acknowledged that he is a god; he is an aerial spirit which you have seen. If you give him a command, straightway he performs the task: he sends dreams, he brings women, men without the use of magical material, he kills, he destroys, he stirs up winds from the earth, he carries / gold, silver, bronze, and he gives them to you whenever the need arises. And 14. For the relationship between amulets and the magical papyri, see M. Smith, “Relations between Magical Papyri and Magical Gems,” Papyrologica Bruxellensia 18 (1979): 129–36; J. Schwartz, “Papyri Graecae Magicae und magische Gemmen,” in M. J. Vermaseren, ed., Die orientalischen Religionen im Römerreich, EPRO 93 (Leiden: Brill, 1981) 485–509.

15. This statement shows that something has fallen from the text, for this is the first extant reference here to myrrh troglitis. [E.N.O.] The name may be commonly referred to as “Ethiopian myrrh.”

16. This angel or messenger (ἄγγελος) is also referred to as “the god” throughout this spell.

17. The adverb, which occurs in PGM I. 76, 79, 91, 108, 111, 113, 116, 121, can mean “precisely” or “in detail.”

18. This is not to be confused with the famous Mendacian wine. Mendesian refers to the Egyptian city of Mendes in the Nile Delta. For a discussion of the confusion between the names, see Darby, Food: The Gift of Osiris II, 600.

19. Apparently this boy serves as a child medium. Cf. for this form of medium PGM II. 56; V. 376; VII. 544, etc.

20. πρόπεμπε with an inanimate (and esp. abstract) object is poetic. Here the prefix seems to have its literal meaning: “first,” hence “preliminary words.” [E.N.O.]

21. πρὸς ἃ φράζει should be read as second-person middle (cf. I. 79) and not third-person active, as Preisendanz translates.

22. The position of the word “this” is awkward in the Greek text; perhaps “the oath itself” is preferable. Cf. I. 156: “the same spell.”

he frees from bonds a person chained in prison, he opens doors, he causes invisibility so that no one can see you at all, he is a bringer of fire, he brings warer, wine, bread and [whatever] you wish in the way of foods: olive oil, vinegar—with the 105 single exception of fish²³—and he will bring plenty of vegetables, / whatever kind you wish, but as for pork,²⁴ you must not ever tell him to bring this at all! And when you want to give a [dinner], tell him so. Conjure up in your mind any suitable room and order him to prepare it for a banquet quickly and without delay. At once he will bestow chambers with golden ceilings, and you will see their walls covered 110 with marble—and you consider these things partly real / and partly just illusionary—and costly wine, as is meet to cap a dinner splendidly. He will quickly bring daimons, and for you he will adorn these servants with sashes. These things he does quickly. And [as soon as] you order [him] to perform a service, he will do so, and 115 you will see him excelling in other things: He stops ships and [again] / releases them, he stops very many evil [daimons], he checks wild beasts and will quickly break the teeth of fierce reptiles, he puts dogs to sleep and renders them voiceless. He changes into whatever form [of beast] you want: one that flies, swims, a quadruped, a reptile. He will carry you [into] the air, and again hurl you into the billows / of the sea's current and into the waves of the sea; he will quickly freeze rivers
 120 and seas and in such a way that you can run over them firmly, as you want. And [especially] will he stop, if ever you wish it, the sea-running foam, and whenever you wish to bring down stars²⁵ and whenever you wish to make [warm things] cold
 125 and cold things / warm,²⁶ he will light lamps and extinguish them again.²⁷ And he will shake walls and [cause] them to blaze with fire; he will serve you suitably for [whatever] you have in mind, O [blessed] initiate of the sacred magic, and will accomplish it for you, this most powerful assistant, who is also the only lord of the air.
 130 And the gods will agree to everything, for without him / nothing happens. Share this great mystery with no one [else], but conceal it, by Helios, since you have been deemed worthy by the lord [god].

*And engraved on the stone*³¹ is: Helioros³² as a lion-faced figure, holding in the left / hand a celestial globe and a whip, and around him in a circle is a serpent biting its tail. And on the exergue of the stone is this name (conceal it): “ACHA ACHACHA CHACH CHARCHARA CHACH.” And after passing an Anubian string³³ through it, wear it around your neck.

Spell to Selene: “INOUTHŌ³⁴ PTOUAUMI ANCHARICH CHARAPTOUMI ANOCHA ABITHROU / ACHARABAUBAU BARATHIAN ATEB DOUANANOU APTYR PANOR PAU- RACH SOUMI PHORBA PHORIPHORBARABAU BŌĒTH AZA PHOR RIM MIRPHAR ZAURA PTAUZOU CHŌTHARPARACHTHIZOU ZAITH ATIAU LABAU KANTANTOUMI BATHARA CHTHIBI ANOCH.” Having said this, you will see some star gradually free itself from [heaven] and become a god. / But you approach, take him by the hand, kiss him and say the same spell: “ŌPTAUMI NAPHTHAUBI MAIOUTHMOU MĒTROBAL RACHĒPTOUMI AMMŌCHARI AUTHEI A. . . TAMARA CHIŌBITAM TRIBŌMIS ARACHO ISARI RACHI IAKOUBI TAURABERŌMI ANTABI TAUBI.” When you have spoken this, / a reply will be given. But you say to him: “What is your divine name? Reveal it to me ungrudgingly, so that I may call upon [it].” It consists of 15 letters: SOUESOLYR PHTHĒ MŌTH.³⁵

And this is spoken next: “Hither to me, King, [I call you] God of Gods, mighty, boundless, undefiled, indescribable, firmly established Aion. / Be inseparable from me from this day forth through all the time of my life.”

Then question him by the same oaths. If he tells you his name, take him by the hand, descend and have him recline as I have said above, setting before him part of the / foods and drinks which you partake of. And when you release him, sacrifice to him after his departure what is prescribed and pour a wine offering, and in this way you will be a friend of the mighty angel. When you go abroad, he will go abroad with you; when you are destitute, he will give you money. He will tell you what things will happen both when and at what time of the night or day. And if / anyone asks you “What do I have in mind?” or “What has happened to me?” or even “What is going to happen?,” question the angel, and he will tell you in silence. But you speak to the one who questions you as if from yourself. When you are dead, he will wrap [up] your body as befits a god,³⁶ but he will take your spirit and carry it into the air with him. / For no aerial spirit which is joined with a mighty assistant will go into Hades, for to him all things are subject. Whenever you wish to do something, speak his name alone into the air [and] say, [“Come!”] and you will see him actually standing near you. And say to him, “Perform this task,” and he does it at once, and after doing it he will say to you, “What else do you want? For I am eager for heaven.” If you do not / have immediate orders, say to him, “Go, lord,” and he will depart. In this fashion, then, the god will be seen by you alone, nor will anyone ever hear the sound of his speaking, just you yourself alone. And he will tell you

32. This is Helios-Horus. See Bonner, SMA 19–20, 153.

33. The precise nature of the Anubian cord is not clear. Anubis, the divine undertaker, may have had his name applied to thread used in mummification (see also IV. 1083, 2899; XXXVI. 237). See P. Wolters, “Faden und Knoten als Amulett,” ARW 8, Beiheft (1905): 1–22; Bonner, SMA 3.

34. INOUTHŌ corresponds to Egyptian i ntr “3, “O great god,” and is the beginning of an invocation. [R.K.R.]

35. In Greek the name consists of fifteen letters.

36. This dressing up refers to the practice of mummification and the body’s subsequent deification. See B. Gunn, “The Decree of Amonrasenethēr for Neskhons,” JEA 41 (1955): 84–85. [R.K.R.]

This, then, is the prayer of deliverance for the first-begotten and first-born god: “I call upon you, lord. Hear me, holy god who rest among the holy ones, at 210 stand untold myriads of angels. You have been exalted to heaven, and the lord / has borne witness to your wisdom and has praised your power highly and has said that you have strength in the same way as he, as much strength as he [himself] has.

“I call upon you, lord of the universe, in an hour of need; hear me, for my soul is

Say this to Helios or whenever you are forced to do so.⁴¹

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil. Since the character of this invocation shows no tangible connection with the preceding or foregoing spells, it is best understood as a separate charm. Although the purpose of this prayer (which at certain points is reminiscent of the language of the Psalms) is not exactly stated, ll. 215–16 and 221–22 suggest that deliverance from the onslaught of a demonic attack is requested.

37. Preisendanz’s reading ἰσχυρῶ νύχ is doubtful because the term is nowhere else attested (see his apparatus ad loc.). The word may reflect an Egyptian or Semitic idiom (“son of your own loins”), an idiom formed in Greek from the word ἰσχυιον (hips). The Egyptian term is more general, however, and refers to “part of the body.” [J.B.] Cf. also Gn 35: 11; 1 Kgs 8: 19; Acts 2: 30; Heb 7: 5, 10. See furthermore PGM IV. 646, 2519, and Abt, Apologie 65–66.

38. Doxai is a name for angels. See also IV. 1051, 1202, and Bauer, s.v. “δόξα,” 4.

39. The translation of ἄβουλος follows Preisendanz (“ratlos”). For the general language of prayer, cf. Ps 42: 6, 12; 43: 5; Jon 4: 9 LXX; Sir 37: 2; Mk 14: 34 par.

Indispensable invisibility spell: Take fat or an eye of a nightowl and a ball of dung rolled⁴² by a beetle and oil of an unripe olive⁴³ and grind them all together until smooth, and smear your whole / body with it and say to Helios: “I adjure you by your great name, BORKĒ PHOIOUR IŌ ZIZIA APARXEOUCH THYTHE LAILAM AAAAAA IIIII OOOO IEŌ IEŌ IEŌ IEŌ IEŌ IEŌ NAUNAX AI AI AEŌ AEŌ EAŌ,” and moisten it and say in addition: “Make me invisible, lord Helios, AEŌ ŌAE IEŌ EAŌ, / in the presence of any man until sunset, IŌ IŌ Ō PHRIXRIZŌ EŌA.” 225 230

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil.

PGM I. 232–47

Memory spell: Take hieratic papyrus and write the prescribed names with Hermaic⁴⁴ myrrh ink. And once you have written them as they are prescribed, wash them off⁴⁵ into spring water / from 7 springs and drink the water on an empty stomach for seven days while the moon is in the east. But drink a sufficient amount. 235

This is the writing on the strip of papyrus: “KAMBRĒ CHAMBRE SIXIŌPHI HARPON CHNOUPHI BRINTATĒNŌPHRIBRJSKYLMA ARAOUAZAR BAMESEN KRIPHI NIPTOUMI CHMOUMAŌPH AKTIŌPHI ARTŌSE BIBIOU / BIBIOU SPHĒ SPHĒ NOUSI NOUSI SIEGŌ SIEGŌ NOUCHA NOUCHA LINOUCHA LINOUCHA CHYCHBA CHYCHBA KAXIŌ CHYCHBA DĒTOPHŌTH II AA OO YY ĒĒ EE ŌŌ.” After doing these things wash the writing off and drink as is prescribed. 240

This is also the composition of the ink: myrrh troglitis, 4 drams; 3 karian figs, 7 pits of Nikolaus dates, / 7 dried pinecones, 7 piths of the single-stemmed wormwood, 7 wings of the Hermaic ibis,⁴⁶ spring water. When you have burned the ingredients, prepare them and write. 245

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil.

PGM I. 247–62

Tested spell for invisibility: A great work. Take an eye of an ape or of a corpse that has died a violent death and a plant of peony (he means the rose). Rub these with oil of lily, and as you are rubbing / them from the right to the left,⁴⁷ say the spell as follows: “I am ANUBIS, I am OSIR-PHRE,⁴⁸ I am OSOT SORONOUIER, I am OSIRIS whom SETH destroyed.”⁴⁹ Rise up, infernal daimon, IŌ ERBĒTH IŌ PHOBĒTH IŌ PAKERBĒTH IŌ APOMPS; whatever I, NN, order you to do, / be obedient to me.” 250 255

And if you wish to become invisible, rub just your face with the concoction, and you will be invisible for as long as you wish. And if you wish to be visible again, move from west to east and say this name, and you will be obvious and visible to all / men. 260

42. The pellet (“that which is rolled”) of a scarab is sacred to the sun god Ra. See also PGM VII. 584. [R.K.R.]

43. The papyrus reads φακνίνου, which Preisendanz emends to (ὀμ)φακνίνου. For similar expressions, see PGM IV. 228–29, 3008. For a different reading, see Schmidr, GGA 1931, 445.

44. This is the myrrh ink of Hermes.

45. In order to transfer the magical powers of the names, they were washed off and consumed. For the widespread practice, see Handbuch des deutschen Aberglaubens 8 (1936/37): 1156–57.

57. The words “Ἀναξ . . . σὺν Παίῳ” form an iambic pentameter which may preserve a line from a longer hymn. The line belongs to Hymn 8 in Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 244. For a similar expression, cf. PGM II. 7–8. [E.N.O.]

58. Or, “I adjure (you hy) God’s head,” here and in the verses that follow.

59. The dactylic hexameters are part of the reconstructed Hymn 4: vv. 7–8, 12–17, 20, 18, 23–24. For other versions and sections of Hymn 4, see PGM IV. 436–61, 1957–89; VIII. 74–80. (The identification of lines in Preisendanz is not correct, vol. II, p. 239: l. 18 is present, l. 19 is missing.) [E.N.O.]

60. The word should be read as a palindrome. One can see the word THŌTHŌ, written twice; it means “Thoth the great.” [R.K.R.]

sacrifice with the aforementioned burnt offering. And after the enquiry, if you you are holding in your left hand, to your right hand; and shift the sprig of laurel, burning lamp; and use the same burnt offering while saying:⁶¹

“Be gracious unto me, O primal god,
 O elder-born, self-generating god.
 I adjure the fire which first shone in the void;
 I adjure your pow’r which is greatest o’er all; /

 That you depart, returning to your ship,
 And harm me not, but be forever kind.”

PGM II. 1–64

“... AKRAKANARBA KANARBA ANARBA NARBA ARBA RBA BA A” (speak the whole name thus, in wing formation).¹

“O Phoibos, helper through your oracles,
 Come joyous, Leto’s son, who works afar,
 Averter, hither come, hither, come hither.
 Foretell, give prophecies amid night’s hour,² 5 ALLALALA ALLALALA SANTALALA TALALA”³ (speak this name too, / leaving off one letter in succession, so as to make a wing formation):⁴

“If e’er with vict’ry-loving laurel branch
 Here from your holy peak you often voiced Words of good omen, so may you now speed
 Your way to me with truthful oracles, LAETONION and TABARAÖTH AEÖ EÖ, lord Apollo Paian, who control this night, who are master of it, who hold the hour of prayer too. Come, mighty daimons, 10 help me today / by truly speaking with the son of Leto and Zeus.”

Add also the following [spell], which is to be written on laurel leaves, and together with the strip of papyrus on which the Headless One is drawn, it is to be placed beside your head, rolled up. It is to be spoken also to the lamp, after you come in from the prayer, before going to bed, after you have placed a lump of frankincense in the wick of the lamp: “BOASOCH⁵ OĒAĒ IAÖIĒ ŌIAĒ ŌIAĒ NICHARO-15 PLĒX / STHOM ŌTHŌ . . . Y IE IÖ ĒI LAĒL IRMOUCH ŌNOR ŌEYE IYŌ EAÖ SABAÖTH
 THĒOTĒ PAÖMIACH SIEOU IAÖ IE IEÖ . . . IOY IEÖY IÖ IĒI ĒÖ IĒAI IEÖA A E Ē I O
 Y Ō.”

61. The following dactylic hexameters also form vv. 16–18 of the reconstructed Hymn 23 in Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 262. [E.N.O.] In contrast to the preceding hymn, ll. 341–47 are Egyptian in character and refer to the sun god’s self-generation and daily travel in his ship. See Horuung, Das Amduat, passim. See also PGM I. 34. [R.K.R.]

1. On the wing formation, see PGM I. 11 and n. Here the formula seems to be incomplete. Supply (KRAKANARBA RAKANARBA AKARNABA) and (A) at the end. Cf. l. 65 below.

2. These lines, except for 4–5, are dactylic hexameters which are not always metrically correct; they are the reconstructed Hymn 9, Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 244. The first three lines appear, in slightly altered form, at PGM IV. 24–27 (Hymn 10, 4–6). [E.N.O.]

3. Presumably SANTALALA, but there is considerable corruption in the text.

4. The lines of the following hymn may have originally been written in some iambic meter. Cf. PGM I. 296–97.

5. In l. 32 the papyrus gives BOLSOCH in lieu of BOASOCH as the beginning of the incantation. One or the other is probably wrong.

In order to remember what is said: Use the following compound.⁶ Take the plant wormwood, a sun opal, a “breathing stone,” the heart of a hoopoe⁷ (also known as the “vulture cock”). Grind all these together, add a sufficiency of honey, and anoint your lips with the mixture, having first incensed / your mouth with a grain of frankincense gum. 20

This is the preparation: In the evening, just before retiring, purify your bed with ass’s milk, and then, holding in your hands twigs⁸ of laurel (the preparation for which is given below), speak the invocation given below. Let your bed be on the ground, either upon clean rushes or upon a rush mat, and lie on your right side, on the ground and in the open air. While performing the invocation, give answer to nobody, and as you are uttering it, make an offering of a lump of frankincense / and 25 twelve right-whorled⁹ pinecones and 2 unblemished [gizzard stones of a] rooster, one to Helios and one to Selene, on the first day [of the month], on a censer¹⁰ of bronze or of earth. On your right inscribe this character,¹¹ and go to sleep in line with the upper stroke of it. While praying, wear a garland of laurel of the following description: Take 12 laurel twigs; make a garland of 7 sprigs, and bind the remaining five together and hold them in your right hand while you pray, / and lie down 30 to sleep holding this, in the above-mentioned position. Inscribe the character with myrrh ink, such as is shown to you [below], with a . . . feather [or pen],¹² and hold it, along with the laurel, while you are uttering in prayer the words which begin “BOLSOCH,” etc.¹³

The names to be written on the sprigs, on each leaf: “YESSEMMIGADŌN ORTHŌ BAUBŌ NOËRE SOIRE SOIRĒ SANKANTHARA ERISCHIGAL SANKISTĒ DŌDEKAKISTĒ AKROUROBORE KODĒRE” / (write 12 names). 35

The ink is as follows: In a purified container burn myrrh and cinquefoil and wormwood; grind them to a paste, and use them. Take a sprig of laurel and Ethiopian cumin and nightshade, and grind them together; take in a clay pot water from a new well, dug either 5 months previously or within the last 5 years, or any one you come across on the first day after its being dug, and throw the mixture into the water. Leave it for just 3 nights, and, as you are uttering the invocation, put a little of it into your / right ear. 40

To achieve a good memory: Write on a leaf of cinquefoil the following character, written with myrrh ink, and keep it in your mouth while you sleep.

*The character is:*¹⁴

Start saying the aforementioned invocation at the 7th hour of the moon, until the god hearkens to you, and you make contact with him.

And these are the compulsive [procedures]: All of them may be brought before the moon after the first or second day. / If he does not appear, sacrifice the brain of 45

6. σύνθεμα as a variant of σύνθημα may also have the meaning of “token” or “sign.”

7. Cf. Horapollo, Hier. 1. 55, and the use of the hoopoe in a magical recipe in PDM xiv. 116. See Crum, Coptic Dictionary 102, s.v. [R.K.R.]

8. κλάδος is normally to be translated “branch,” but that seems to convey the notion of something larger than can be envisioned here. “Twig” may be better, but it may sound too small. The reader must think of a small branch.

9. δεξιούς is either “right-turning” or simply “perfect in shape.” Cf. PGM III. 694; XIII. 10.

10. θυμιατήριον is properly an incense burner, but here perhaps simply a word for “altar.”

11. In the margin is the ankh sign (ⲁ), a symbol of life.

12. The papyrus reads εν πιννλη. . . . Preisendanz suggests πίννη λι[τῆ], “with a simple, or plain, pen” (taking πίννη as the equivalent of the Latin penna).

13. Cf. above, I. 14.

14. The sign is called shenou, an Egyptian symbol of protection. [J.B.]

a black ram, and on the third day the little nail of its right forefoot, the one nearest to the ankle; on the fourth, the brain of an ibis; on the fifth, write the figure sketched below¹⁵ on papyrus with myrrh ink, wrap it in a piece of clothing of one 50 who has died violently, and throw it into the furnace of a bathhouse¹⁶ / (some, however, [throw it] not into a furnace, for that is too extreme, but they suspend it over a lamp, or place it beneath one).

In another [text] I have found the following: If then, he does not hearken to this method, wrap up the figure in the same piece of cloth, and throw it into the furnace of a bathhouse on the fifth day, saying after the invocation: “ABRI and ABRO EXANTIABIL, God of gods, king of kings, now force a friendly daimon of prophecy to come to me, lest I apply worse tortures to you, the things written on the strips of papyrus.” /

55 If even after this he does not hearken, pour fine, pure oil of radishes over an uncorrupted boy, who has been tested,¹⁷ and having gathered it up again, prepare a lamp not painted red, and set it upon a lampstand fashioned from virgin soil (some authorities say to pour some of the oil on the altar also). If you feel a blow,¹⁸ chew up the cumin and drink it down with some unmixed wine.

60 Write the prescribed figure / as given above, along with the characters and the prescribed spell twice with myrrh ink on hieratic papyrus. And of these, one you should hold as you make your invocation, as you go to sleep grasping it in your right hand, and placing it under your head, while the other, if the necessity arrives for the compulsive [procedure], you should roll up in the aforementioned cloth and use as prescribed.

65 An alternative procedure:* Take a sprig of laurel and write the / 2 names on its leaves, the one: “[AKRAKANARBA] KRAKANARBA RAKANARBA AKANARBA KANARBA ANARBA NARBA ARBA RBA BA A”; the other: “SANTALALA ANTALALA NTALALA TALALA ALALA LALA ALA LA A.”¹⁹

Take another sprig with twelve leaves on it, and inscribe on it the following heart-shaped name,²⁰ while you begin with a sacred utterance. This is as follows:
 70 And make of the sprig inscribed with the two names / a garland for yourself, weaving about it a binding consisting of white wool, bound at intervals with red wool, and let this hang down as far as the collarbone. You shall hang a similar binding also from the twelve-leaved sprig, and present yourself to the god in the following manner: Take a completely white cock and a pinecone; pour wine upon it,
 75 anoint yourself and remain praying / until the sacrifice²¹ is extinguished. Then rub

15. That is, the figure of the Headless One given at the end of the variant spell, PGM II. 64–183.

16. Properly, the hot-air space of a hypocaust. [J.M.D.] Bathhouses were important places for doing magic. See Kropp, Koptische Zaubertexte I, 51–52; II, 32; J.H. Johnson, OMRM 56 (1975): 44–45. See also PDM xii. 149. [R.K.R.]

17. γυμναζομένω means literally “trained” or “practiced.” But cf. PDM xiv. 287 and esp. xiv. 68, where a boy’s sexual purity is stressed. Hence the accompanying use of ἀφθόρῳ here.

18. What seems to be envisioned is something akin to an electric shock. Cf. VII. 230. [J.M.D.] Cf. also 2 Sm 6:7.

19. Cf. above, ll. 1–5. Each name is to be uttered in “wing formation,” leaving off one letter from the beginning in sequence. See I. 11 and n.

20. The heart-shaped name is lost, but presumably it resembled the allegedly twelve-part inscription given at ll. 33–35 above. Cf. III. 70, “in the shape of a heart, like a bunch of grapes.”

21. Cf. above, ll. 24ff.

*The operative name*²³ is: “AKTI KARA ABAIŌTH, O lord god, servant of god, who are in control of this night, stand by me, Apollo Paian.”

Go to sleep with your head toward the south. / Use this at the time of sunrise,²⁴ 80

22. MENCHTHŌTH is equivalent to mnē Dhwti, “Thoth is excellent/beneficent.” [R.K.R.]

23. On the significance of the term κύριον ὄνομα, see Philo, Leg. alleg. 1. 75; Det. 22; 83; Plant.

74. For the doctrine of the sacred name, see also Iamblichus, Myst. 7.4–5.

24. The exact significance is not clear, but cf. PGM VI. 4–5, where a very similar hymn is to be recited at sunrise. See also Philo, Vit. cont. 89; Apuleius, Met. 11.20.

25. The basic form of the lines in this passage is metrical, but the dactylic hexameters are frequently interrupted by vores magicæ and brief statements in prose. Ll. 81–102, 107, 132–40, 163–66 have been combined to reconstruct Hymn 11. See Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 245–46. Ll. 81–82 (Hymn 11. 1–2) appear also at PGM VI. 6–7 (Hymn 13. 1–2) and 81 also appears at PGM XII. 87–93. [E.N.O.]

26. For the role of laurel in magic, see L. Deubner, Kleine Schriften zur Klassischen Altertumskunde (Königstein: Hain, 1982) 401–3.

27. The papyrus reads χαίρει, “hail,” which Preisendanz understands as an abbreviation of χαίρει-τισμός, “greeting formula.” See on this A. Baumstark, “Chairetismos,” RAC 2 (1954): 993–1006. The hymn that follows is written in hexameters, although toward the end of the passage the meter falters. The hymnic section that begins in l. 101, “I call upon you . . .,” may be in prose; however, cf. PGM IV. 261ff., where σέ is used repeatedly as the first word of a hexameter and where καλέ(ε)ω follows σέ three times.

28. διωπετής properly means “fallen from Zeus or heaven,” referring to water, but the term is widely used to mean simply “divine.” Here some of the original meaning seems appropriate. See Bauer, s.v. “διωπετής,” Betz, Lukian 168 n. 2.

29. Lachis is probably metrical for Lachesis.

30. The following is an Egyptian section in contrast to the preceding Greek hymn. Ll. 102 and 106–7 contain an invocation of the sun god as a child sitting upon the lotus, enlightening the world. See S. Morenz and J. Schubert, Der Gott auf der Blume (Ascona: Artibus Asiae, 1954). [R.K.R.]

31. For the transformations of the sun god hour by hour, see PGM III. 500ff.; IV. 1596ff., and on the whole subject H. Brugsch, "Die Kapitel der Verwandlungen," ZÄS 5 (1867): 21–26. [R.K.R.]

32. Cf. Apuleius' description of the Olympiaca stola in Met. 11. 24, and Griffith's commentary, The Isis-Book 308–14. The bird may be the phoenix, for which cf. PGM XII. 231; XIII. 881. See on the Phoenix myth the chapter in M. Tardieu, Trois mythes gnostiques: Adam, Êros et les animaux d'Égypte dans un écrit de Nag Hammadi (II, 5) (Paris: Études Augustiniennes, 1974) 231–62.

33. Zas is an old name for Zeus. See also PGM XIXa. 44; Orph. Frag. no. 145 (p. 189); cf. Dieterich, Abraxas 130 n. 1.

34. CHÔOYCH is equivalent to Egyptian kky, "darkness." [R.K.R.]

Preparation for the rite: On the first day, [collect] nails of a sheep; on the second, the nails of a goat; on the third, the hair or knucklebone of a wolf. Use these as burnt offerings for the next 3 days. On the seventh day, in case he does not yet come, / make a lampwick out of a piece of cloth taken from one who has died violently, and light a lamp from pure oil, and recite the prescribed formulas, beseeching and exhorting the god to come with good will; let your place be cleansed of all pollution, and having purified it, begin in purity the supplication to the god, for it is very great and irresistible.

/ Rite: Take mud and purify the doorposts of your bedchamber, in which you are observing ritual purity, and having thus smeared on the mud, write the following inscription with a bronze stylus on the right-hand doorpost.⁴⁰

What is to be written is as follows: “𐌲𐌳𐌹𐌸𐌰 𐌶𐌵𐌿𐌱𐌴𐌽𐌺𐌰 𐌶𐌵𐌿𐌱𐌴𐌽𐌺𐌰 𐌲𐌰𐌶𐌰𐌸𐌰

On the upper part of the door: “𐤌𐤍𐤏𐤋 𐤀𐤕𐤁 𐤄𐤓𐤕 𐤈𐤃𐤎𐤏 𐤀𐤕𐤁.” Below the door, [inscribe] the scarab, as it stands / here,⁴² having anointed it with the blood of a goat, outside your bedchamber. Let the throne be purified, and upon it a linen cloth, and beneath it a footstool. Inscribe on the throne, on the underside: “IÊ IEA IOAY DAMNAMENEUS ABRAË ABRAÔ ABRAÔA; lord of the

36. The papyrus reads πολυφωτιστα (cf. LSJ, s.v. πολυφωτίστης), a reasonably well-formed word only attested here. However, in view of the genitive ὑδάτων following the κατὰ μαγικά, which seems to need a governing noun, Preisendanz emends to πολυφω(τε)κτίστα.

37. For similar formulas see PGM V. 485; XII. 80; XIII. 805ff.; XXI. 25. The formula beginning "ABERAMEN . . ." (see Glossary) should be read in Preisendanz's text as a long palindrome.

38. The following text has many epithets of the god Apollo. Cf. PGM II. 139–40; III. 251; VI. 24–25. See I. 263 and n.

39. The spacing of this formula has been changed to conform to the spacing of the same formula found elsewhere in the PGM (see I. 141–42; III. 77–78, 151–52, etc.).

40. For the ritual concerning the doorposts of the Jewish mezuzah, for which see Ex 12:7, 22–23; Dt 6:4–9; 11:13–21. See Blau, Das altjüdische Zaubrewesen 152; Schürer, History of the Jewish People II, 479–80 (with additional references).

41. For the whole formula, see PGM I. 27.

42. The papyrus has ὡσπερ ἰσχυεῖ, which Preisendanz emends to read ὡς περιέχει, but the meaning is not clear.

Then take up the water in which the drowning took place, and sprinkle it [on] the stadium or in the place where you are performing [the rite].

The formula to be spoken, while you are sprinkling the drowning water, is as follows: “I call upon you, Mother of all men, / you who have brought together the limbs of Meliouchos, even Meliouchos himself, OROBASTRIA NEBOUTOSOUALĒTH, Entrapper,¹¹ Mistress of corpses,¹² Hermes, Hekate, [Hermes?], Hermekate,¹³ LETH AMOUMAMOUTERMYŌR;¹⁴ I conjure you, the daimon that has been aroused in this place, / and you, the daimon of the cat that has been endowed with spirit;¹⁵ come to me on this very day and from this very moment, and perform for me the NN deed” (add the usual, whatever you wish), “CHYCHBACHYCH BACHACHYCH BACH-AXICHYCH BAZABACHYCH BALACHACHYCH BAZĒTŌPHŌTH / BAINCHŌŌŌCH ANI-BŌŌŌ CHŌCHE . . . PHIŌCHEN GĒBRŌCHTHŌ MYSAGAŌTH CHEŌŌ . . . ¹⁶ SABAŌTH EULAMOSI ĒĒLAXIMA . . . [. . . THACHŌCH]AXIN CHOUCHEŌCH.”

On the [1st and 3rd leaves of metal] which you are to use for the conjuration, there should be this: “IAEŌ” /

6. μονάτωρ is a late word for μονάμπυξ, “horse with a single frontlet,” i.e., a racehorse. Presumably one drew crude representations of them, along with their names, on a sheet of papyrus. Cf. such figures on the so-called Sethian curse tablets in R. Wünsch, Sethianische Verfluchungstafeln aus Rom (Leipzig: Teubner, 1899), esp. 51.

7. Cf. PGM IV. 2390 for a similar injunction to perform a rite with good cheer. See also Plutarch, De tranq. an. 20, p. 477E, and R. Bultmann, TDNT 2 (1976): 772–75 s.v. “εὐφραίνω.”

8. The papyrus reads . . . ove. Eitrem suggests τύραννε.

9. It is not clear whether iaktore is a magical word or something sensible. Preisendanz suggests ακτωρε as a Greek equivalent of Latin actores, “drivers,” but in that case the syntax is unclear.

10. Emended and restored with plausibility from PGM III. 78–79, 513–14, 545–46; IV. 339–40; LXVII. 13.

11. Although attested in LSJ, s.v. “ἄρκυια,” as an epithet of the goddess Hekate with uncertain meaning (with reference to Audollent, Defixionum Tabellae 38. 14 [third cent. A.D.]), “the netter” is a standard Egyptian underworld daimon. See D. Bidoli, Die Sprüche der Fangnetze (Glückstadt: Augustin, 1976); J. Zandee, Death as an Enemy (Leiden: Brill, 1960) 226–34. [R.K.R.]

12. The term νεκρία is also attested in this sense only in PGM IV. 2781, but necessarily having some such meaning.

13. The name Hermekate is a combination of Hermes and Hekate. See Wünsch, Defixionum Tabellae, nos. 104–7. Here in the papyrus the name could also be read Hermekatēlēth, that is, with the typical ending -ēth; thus Eitrem in the apparatus to III. 37.

14. AMOY at the beginning is Coptic for “come!” [R.K.R.]

15. πνευματώτης is a form not otherwise attested; cf. PGM XIII. 525: ἐμπνευματώδη.

16. A plausible restoration is IAŌ in that IAŌ and SABAŌTH form a common pairing in the PGM.

20. A reference to the solar bark of Re. See PGM III. 98–105. [R.K.R.]

21. Seth plays here the role of the defender of the bark of Re. See H. te Velde, Seth, God of Confusion (Leiden: Brill, 1967) 99–108. [R.K.R.]

22. Or, “for other uses.” Cf. the list of uses at PGM XIII. 230–333.

23. A reference to a place from where the sunset can be viewed.

26. Egyptian mn-nfr, “established and beautiful,” an epithet of Memphis. [J.B.]

27. For this type of accusation see PGM III. 5; IV. 2475 and n.

28. Probably the meaning is “by the Hebrew sound” and refers to the vowel combinations with IŌ. [J.B.] See also Blau, Das altjüdische Zaubrerwesen 128–37; O. Eissfeld, “Jahwe-Name und Zaubrerwesen,” in his Kleine Schriften 1 (Tübingen: Mohr, Siebeck, 1962) 150–71. On the use of “barbaric language” (ῥῆσις βαρβαρικὴ) generally, see Hopfner, OZ 1, sections 706–69; Betz, Lukian 153–54.

29. This peculiar expression is found also in PGM IV. 262; cf. VII. 302–4; XXXVI. 342–49 and perhaps IV. 1456; XIII. 291; XIXa. 11.

30. Probably referring to the Egyptian goddess Satis. See Bonnet, RÄRG 670–71, s.v. “Satis.”

 and a charm to cause separation and enmity.*

*Tr.: J. M. Dillon. This elaborate spell, a charm suitable for a number of purposes (all of which are forms of malicious magic), is set forth with special reference to its use in chariot races; it is understood, however, that the additional functions, as stated at the end of the spell, also prove useful to the practitioner, provided that he supply in the required places the appropriate requests.

31. Neither φιλομαντοσύνης nor χρυσοπρόσωπος is attested elsewhere, according to LSJ.

32. Reading λευβόρω, a compound found nowhere else; it probably means "west."

33. It is not clear whether this damaged word is a vox magica or a Greek word.

34. Mourōph is a name of the hour god in PGM IV. 1690 (the god of the eleventh hour, having the form of an ibis).

35. Forms of this logos occur in PGM IV. 1010; XII. 190; XIII. 780, 820. The final name Kmēph is an epithet of Osiris and is the equivalent of the Egyptian hm̄f, "his shrine." Cf. SATRAPERKMĒPH in PGM XII. 185; XIII. 915.

36. The phrase is equivalent to the Egyptian p3 ḥy ʿ3 p3 ḥy ʿ3 p3 ntr n3 ntr. w tr. w, "Good Daimon, Good Daimon, O god of all the gods!" PSOETŌ should be the usual PSALAS. [R.K.R.]

37. For the sun as an egg, cf. PGM XII. 100–106. On the cosmic egg, see J. Bergman, Isis-Seelen und Isis-Ei (Uppsala: Almqvist and Wiksell, 1970) 73–102; Morenz, Egyptian Religion 177–79. [R.K.R.]

38. This formula has been misread and is here emended on the basis of PGM I. 141–42; II. 138–39; III. 77–78. Preisendanz has LABRA at the beginning. The lambda has been misread for a chi.

39. The papyrus has [.]α[.] δαμινον, which Preisendanz restores to read [κ]α[ρ]δ[α]μινον, an unattested adjectival form of κάρδαμον, "nose-smart" (thus LSJ, s.v.; a mustardlike plant). However, Schmidt, GGA 1931, 450 suggests [β]α[λ]α δάμινον, "balsam wood." Cf. PGM XII. 364.

40. A variant of the name OSIRCHENTECHTHA. See also PGM VII. 257. The name corresponds to Egyptian Osiris-khenty-khet, a combination of Osiris and Khenty-khet, the local god of Athribis, who in the text is joined together with Osiris, Horus, and Apis. See Bonnet, RÄRG 131–33, s.v. "Chen-rechtaï." [R.K.R.]

Although the exact purpose of this short spell cannot be determined, its function may be similar to that of the spell to follow, viz., an oracular request.

Make little rounds, as many as you wish, / but put an ounce of each element of the mixture into each of these, and proceed thus, singing a hymn of praise to the god. Then the deity will come to you, shaking the whole house and the tripod⁴⁴ before him. Then he will bring about⁴⁵ your enquiry into the future, being clear in his intercourse with you,⁴⁶ as long as you wish, / and then dismiss the god with thanks. 190 195

The drawing of the tripod:

*This is the prayer of encounter of the rite which is recited to Helios:*⁴⁷

“Keep silent, everyone, the voice that’s in Your mouths; O circling birds of air, keep quiet; /
Cease frolicking, you dolphins, o’er the brine.
Stand for me, river streams and fountain [flows].” 200

41. Supplying [οὐροβ]ορος in the lacuna. [R.D.K.]

42. τὰ ξυρά. Preisendanz translates on the basis of a gloss in Hesychius, ξυρόν, “cutting, dry, sharp.” But perhaps we are to understand simply ξύλα, “pieces of wood,” assuming a confusion of lambda and rho. The definite article, however, suggests the pieces of wood were previously mentioned, in which case this spell would be connected to the preceding (cf. l. 165).

43. The papyrus has σχομπανον, a word otherwise unattested and meaningless. Preisendanz emends to κομπανον, “strawberry tree,” a rather radical change. Perhaps we should read κοπάνον, “pestle,” the sigma being an error, and the mu intrusive, as it often is with pi. This, however, would have to be a genitive used instrumentally, which is troublesome.

44. This tripod has not been mentioned before, but it is obviously central to the ceremony (cf. ll. 291–96 below). Perhaps we can assume the tripod is a part of the magician’s basic equipment (see PGM IV. 1890–91; 1897; V. 200–201; XIII. 104, 661, etc.).

45. Reading future τελεῖ instead of imperative τέλει. The phrase that follows (τρανής τῇ ὁμίλῃ) seems to make better sense if it refers to the god. Cf. PGM II. 83–84, where ὁμιλῶν is used of the god consorting with the magician.

46. On Apollo’s epiphany cf. Callimachus, Hy. 2.1–2. [W.B.]

47. The following dactylic hexameters are also the reconstructed Hymn 5. See Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 241–42. [E.N.O.]

Now, birds of augury, stop everything
 Beneath the sky. Snakes in your dens, attend
 The cry and be afraid. May you in awe
 205 [Keep] silence, daimons 'mid the shades. / The world

 Of Zeus, divine ΙΑΩ; and you, too,
 Who rule in heaven's realm, O [RAPHAËL],
 Who joy in sunrise, be a gracious god,
 O ABRASAX; and you, O greatest one,
 O heav'nly one, I call, and [you, MICHAËL], your helper,⁴⁹ /

 Of Zeus, and who has both exalted⁵⁰ nature
 And brought forth nature in its turn from nature.
 And I call . . . of the immortals . . .

48. The name Semea also appears at PGM III. 29, where it is fem., and at V. 429; PDM xiv. 214 among the voces magicae. Despite the designation "King" here, Semea elsewhere is a Syrian goddess whose name appears in various forms on numerous votive inscriptions. She is identified with several deities, e.g., Astarte, Athena, Hera. Semea does not appear in Greco-Roman literary writings except perhaps in Ps.-Lucian, De Syr. Dea 33 (yet the text is uncertain), where it is suggested she is Semiramis. There is also a Syrian god Seimios. See O. Höfer, in Roscher IV, 601; R. Dussaud, "Simea und Simios," PRE, second series 5 (1927): 137–40; W. Fauth, "Simia," KP 5 (1979): 200. [E.N.O.]

49. The papyrus reads ἀ[ρ]ωγόν σου Μ[ι]χαήλ, which is unmetrical. Heitsch would excise ἀρωγόν σου; Preisendanz would excise μέγιστε at the beginning of the line, and write Μιχαήλ σου ἀρωγόν, which would restore the meter. "Michael" is a restoration, but a probable one; cf. PGM I. 301.

50. ἀέξοντα, the emendation of Wünsch, is preferable to δεῖξαντα for two reasons: (1) it corrects the meter and (2) it restores the proper sense, for whomever is written must govern φύσιν in both clauses. In any case, ἀέξοντα must be taken as azeugma. [E.N.O.]

51. Fahz reads ἔσσι in lieu of ἔστι, "you are almighty god."

52. ἐπισκεπάζω is properly "to cover over," hence "veil." It may, however, be a solecism for ἐπισκέπτομαι, "look upon," the sense required here (cf. Preisendanz: "beschaut"). Cf. PGM I. 303, ἐπισκοπάζεις, which is at least metrical, though the verb is not elsewhere attested. [E.N.O.]

53. The readings of the papyrus are quite uncertain here. See the restoration by Heitsch in Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 241–42 (Hymn 5).

You I adjure, god's seal,⁵⁴ at whom all deathless Gods of Olympos quake and daimons who Stand forth preeminent, for whom the sea
 Is ordered to be silent when it hears.⁵⁵
 You I adjure by mighty god Apollo. /

ΑΕἰΙΟΥΩ."

230

Also say this: "Send me the daimon who will give responses to me about everything which I order him to speak about." And he will bring this about.

*This is also [another] hymn:*⁵⁶

"I⁵⁷ sing of you, O blessed one, O healer, Giver of oracles, / O all-wise one,
 O Delian [lord and Python-]slaying⁵⁸ [youth],
 Dodona's [king, foretell,] O Pythian Paian;

54. O, "I adjure you [by] the god's seal." See PGM I. 306 and n.

55. In Hymn 5, Preisendanz concludes with ἀκούει, but the following words seem part of the hymn for two reasons: (1) they are almost metrically sound, and (2) they seem to have a poetic sense. [E.N.O.]

56. This hymn is extremely fragmentary in the papyrus. Here the suggested restoration by Heitsch is followed. See Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 247 (Hymn 12). [E.N.O.]

57. This passage contains what appears to be dactylic hexameters, many of which are fragmentary while others are completely missing. [E.N.O.]

58. The papyrus has]ωλετοκτυπε, which Preisendanz (vol. II, p. 247 [Hymn 12]) restores as [Πυθ]ολετοκτύπε. This, if correct, would be a unique epithet, a combination of two attested epithets: Πυθοκτόνος, "Python slayer," and Πυθολέτης, "Python destroyer."

59. On the instrument called πλῆκτρον, cf. Plutarch, De def. or. 436E; Clement Alex., Protr. I. 5. 3. [W.B.]

60. Read οὐρ(αν)οδρόμε for papyrus ουροδρομε, which is meaningless. For this epithet see l. 258 and LSJ, s.v.

Come to your prophet, but come now in haste,

- 260 Dismissal: [“Hasten], O air-traversing Pythian Paian; return to your heavens, / leaving to me health together with all gratitude, benevolent and ready to hearken, a sure breastplate (?), and depart to your own heavens, and [dwell there.]”

The preparation for the operation: For a direct vision, set up a tripod and a table of olive wood or of laurel wood, and on the table carve in a circle these characters:⁶⁷

61. For another example of placing something under the tongue, see PGM IV. 1745–46. Cf. also V. 253–54.

62. Cf. Smirh, Jesus the Magician 116, who translates: “(in the morning) before you speak to anyone.”

63. The formula is spoken to each of the four winds as the officiant faces them successively.

64. κύκλος is supplied by Preisendanz, who translates it “Zodiakalkreis.” In the parallel passage in PGM VII. 284 papyrus has κύκλος Σελήνης, which Preisendanz translates “Kreislauf des Mondes.”

65. Cf. PGM IV. 1718–19, 1721 for such a use of κλίνω.

66. The term “angel” can also be read as “messenger.”

67. Among these characters a scarab is drawn.

ZC7468Δ'Λ. Cover the tripod with clean linen, / and place a censer on the tripod. 295
It is advantageous⁶⁸ to place on the table a [hollow figurine] of Apollo out of laurel wood. Engrave [on a lamella] of gold, of silver, or of tin these characters:
ΘΣΡϞⲉⲓⲛⲁⲣⲏⲩⲙⲟⲩ. Place the lamella under the censer, near / the wooden image, 300 which was set up [at the same time as the] censer, and place [next to] the tripod a beaker or a shell containing [pure] water. In the center of the shrine, surrounding the tripod, inscribe on the floor with a white stylus the following character. . . . It is necessary to keep yourself pure for three days in advance. The shrine and the [tripod] must be / covered. [If] you wish [to see], look inside, wearing clean [white] 305 garments [and crowned] with a crown of laurel,⁶⁹ which on the head . . . wormwood . . . 68. Fahz and Preisendanz take καλόν as modifying θυμιατήριον, "a beautiful censer." Here καλόν has been taken with ἔστιν κτλ., and the text has been punctuated accordingly. Cf. also PGM IV. 2520 and Bauer, s.v. "καλός," 3a.

69. The text at this point has many lacunae, and the reconstruction is uncertain. Fahz and Preisendanz take the reference to the garments and the laurel to refer to the god who is seen.

70. LSJ, s.v. ἡλιόγονος, σεληνόγονος translates these epithets accordingly. However, since selēnogomon is attested as a plant (peony) and since a plant name would be appropriate here, one should perhaps translate “peony.” “Sun-born” is not attested as a plant name.

71. THOOUTH ΠΙΘ ΠΙΘ (cf. also l. 340) is equivalent to Egyptian Dhwtj p3 ʿ3 p3 ʿ3, "Thoth the twice-great." Cf. PGM IV. 19. For this title of Thoth, see J. D. Ray, The Archive of Hor (London: Egypt Exploration Society, 1976) 158–60; R. K. Ritner, "Hermes Pentamegistos," Göttinger Miszellen 49 (1981): 73–75. [R.K.R.]

72. Following G. Möller (see the apparatus in Preisendanz ad loc.) this short section can also be read as Coptic: "[I am] Thoṯ; I am Sa[.]out; I am Em[.]c[.....]on; I am Alaboul[.....]lōrai; I am (?) Natreko; [.]m[.....] is your [true] name [...]." [M.W.M.]

73. At the beginning of l. 369 appears what could be an isolated Coptic name, Hor-Pre; cf. Möller, in the apparatus, who suggests Harpokrates. [R.K.R.]

74. This could also be rendered “a grave.” Cf. LSJ, s.v. “τόπος,” 5; also l. 285 above.

Say the name seven times, and quickly say / the other usual formulas. . . .⁸⁸ 430

76. That is, Helios, the sun god.

77. The papyrus has καταχεῖσα[s], “pour it,” which is not meaningful here. Schmidt, GGA 193 (1931): 451–52, suggests καταλεάζειν on the basis of Hesychius’ ἀλεάζειν, “to heat up.” The translation here follows the text of Preisendanz.

78. Schmidt, GGA 193 (1931): 451, adds (εἰς), “into,” which seems necessary to complete the sense of the phrase, viz., “put it [into] a clean vessel.”

79. It seems only twelve pastry dolls are to be shaped and not an additional loaf and piece of pastry, as Preisendanz seems to take it. [R.D.K.]

80. That is, Selene, the moon goddess.

81. Probably Coptic pĉōsm [pe]houit, “the first darkness.” [M.W.M.]

82. Probably read Gehenna. [M.W.M.]

83. Perhaps Coptic, meaning “Jesus our grear one.” [M.W.M.]

On the fifteenth, the fifteenth name, SESENGEN BARPHARAGGĒS AGAB . . . AEĒIOYŌ (add the usual formulas, as much as you want, saying it on each day).

When the moon [wanes], say [the formula] in hexameter, saying it seven times until it is again the fourteenth of the goddess. But beware, lest it be in conjunction . . . each day . . . and the whole composition of the divine arrangement be undone. [For] the lord [god] speaks. 102. Pliny identifies παυδέρως as an opal (NH 37. 84) or an amethyst (NH 37. 123). It has been rendered here as amethyst because in 37.80 Pliny says opals come only from India. See the note by D. E. Eicholz, LCL edition of Pliny’s Natural History, vol. 10, p. 230, n. a. [J.S.]

103. The term literally means “glass fish.” [M.S.]

104. The translation of ἡλιοπάλιος is uncertain.

105. Cf. for this name PGM I. 143 and n.

106. Following Preisendanz’s translation as “Auserwählter.”

107. The papyrus reads κατατετιμμένη[s], a verb not attested elsewhere. The meaning could also be “despised.” Preisendanz suggests that the widow is Isis and the magician identifies himself with Horus. Probably, the translation “dishonored” is to be preferred, because it would refer to the murder of Isis’ husband and her subsequent flight to the swamps of Chemmis to raise her son Horus. For Horus as orphan, see Borghouts, Ancient Egyptian Magical Texts 69, no. 92. [R.K.R.]

108. These dactylic hexameters, many of which are metrically faulty, are also the reconstructed Hymn 2, for which see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 238. [E.N.O.]

- *[If you make] an offering of wheaten meal and ripe mulberries and unsoftened¹²³ (?) sesame and uncooked thrion and throw into this a beet, you will gain control of 615 your own shadow¹²⁴ / so that it [will serve] you. Go at the sixth hour of the day, toward [the rising sun], to a deserted place, girt about with a [new] dark-colored palmfiber basket, and on your head a scarlet cord as a headband, behind your right 620 ear / the feather of a falcon, behind your left that of an ibis.

- Having reached the place,¹²⁵ [prostrate] yourself, stretch out your hands, and utter the following formula: "Cause now my shadow to serve me, because I know 625 your sacred names [and] your signs and / your symbols, and [who you are at each hour], and what your name is."¹²⁶

- Having said this, [utter] the formula given above,¹²⁷ and in case he does not [hearken, say]:¹²⁸ "I have uttered your sacred names and [your signs] and your sym-630 bols, wherefore, O lord,¹²⁹ cause / my [shadow] to serve me." [And] at the seventh [hour] it will come to you before [your] face, and you address it [and say]: "Follow me everywhere!" But [look] to it, that it not leave you.

*Tr. J. M. Dillon. See the introductory note on PGM III. 494–611. This unique spell to acquire control over one's shadow may be part of the whole Encounter with Helios contained in III. 494–731. The Coptic section to follow (PGM III. 633–731) belongs with this section, and the mention of the "signs and symbols" in l. 625 connects this spell to the preceding; furthermore, the mention of the "formula given above" (l. 626) must refer to a formula given in the preceding spell, probably the formula found in III. 494ff. The appearance of one's shadow is thus the proof of Helios' appearance requested in PGM III. 494–731.

123. Preisendanz reads ἀ[ρ]έκ[χ]υρον, a word otherwise unattested. More likely would be the restoration ἀ[δ]ι[α]χ[υ]ρον, "not softened by cooking"; hence the translation here. [R.D.K.]

124. Cf. DMP col. IV, l. 23 for a spell for "lucky shadows" (wd hyb.t). [R.K.R.] See also Betz, "The Delphic Maxim," 163–64.

125. Literally, "treading about in the place."

2. That is, Thursday.

3. Perhaps Sunday.

4. These enigmatic phrases are instructions for the use of the spell.

5. This passage is parallel to PDM xiv. 627–35. See F. Ll. Griffith, “The Old Coptic Magical Texts of Paris,” ZÄS 38 (1900): 86–93. [R.K.R.]

6. Or “under the shade of the noubs tree.”

7. According to Griffith, ZÄS 38 (1900): 87, at Pnubs the noubs tree was sacred to Thoth. See on this point Brugsch, Dictionnaire 334–35.

8. Meroe is the capital of an ancient state in the Sudan. See Bounet, RÄRG 456–57, s.v. “Meroe.”

9. Cf. also PDM xiv. 627–29. Pashalom is the capital of the nome in which Abydos is also located. Situated to the south of This, Abydos is the holy city where the head of Osiris was buried. See Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 362 n. 1.

Anubis, of the nome of Hansiese,¹⁰ upon his mountain.¹¹ Praise be to the goddesses—Thoth the great, the great, the wise. Praise be to the gods, / ACHNOUI 20 ACHAM ABRA ABRA SABAÖTH.¹² For Akshha Shha¹³ is my name, Sabashha is my true name; Shlot Shlot very valiant is my name. So let him who is in the underworld join him who is in the air; let them arise, come in, and bring me news / of 25 the matter about which I ask them” (add the usual).

*Tr.: M. W. Meyer. This request for an oracle may be part of the larger spell contained in PGM IV. 1–85.

PGM IV. 26–51

*Initiation.¹⁴ Keep yourself pure for 7 days beforehand. On the third of the month, go to a place from which the Nile has recently receded, before anyone walks on the area that was flooded—or at any rate, to a place that has been inundated by the Nile. / On two bricks¹⁵ standing on their sides, build a fire with olive wood 30
 (that is, with a branch of it) when half of the sun is above the horizon; but before the sun appears, dig a trench around the altar. When the disk of the sun is fully above the horizon, / cut off the head of an unblemished, solid white cock which 35
 [you are to carry] under your left arm (and do dig the trench around¹⁶ the altar before the sun appears).¹⁷ When you are beheading the cock, fix it in place [with your knees]¹⁸ and hold it down all by yourself. / Throw the head into the river and 40 drink up the blood, draining it off into your right hand and putting what’s left of the body on the burning altar. Then jump into the river. Immerse yourself in the clothes you have on, walk backwards¹⁹ out of the water, and, after changing into 45 fresh garments, / depart without turning round.²⁰ After this, take bile from an owl, rub some of it over your eyes with the feather of an ibis, and your initiation will be complete. But if you can’t get hold of an owl, use an ibis’s egg and a falcon’s 50 feather. / Bore a hole in the egg, insert the feather, break it open, and thereby get the fluid to rub on yourself.

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr.

10. The location is unknown. Cf. Ha-si-ise-t, “house of the son of Isis.” See A. H. Gardiner, Ancient Egyptian Onomastica (London: Oxford University Press, 1968) II, 29* (no. 341A). One conjecture is that of Brugsch, Dictionnaire 659, who has identified Hansiese as a site (Chenoboskia?) near Koptos and Dendera in Upper Egypt.

11. This refers to an ancient title of Anubis. Cf. PDM xiv. 174. In this connection one should also note the relationship between mountain, desert, and cemetery in ancient Egypt.

12. Hebrew for “Lord, Lord of Hosts;” ABRA may be a variation of arba (Heb. “four”) designating the tetragrammaton. See Blau, Das altjüdische Zauberverwesen 126; Doruseiff, Das Alphabet 64; A. Barb, “Abraxas-Studien,” in Hommages à W. Deonna (Bruxelles: Latomus, 1957) 67–86.

13. Or “JEAKSHHA SHHA”; but cf. PGM IV. 77, also III. 658, 659, 661, 667, 673, etc., for other examples of the common formula “for . . . is my name” or “for I am. . . .”

14. The purpose of this rite is not clear (cf. l. 48). It may have simply been a part of the longer ritual of the context.

15. On the magical use of bricks for both the living and the dead, see J. Monnet, “Les Briques magiques du Musée du Louvre,” Revue d’Égyptologie 8 (1951): 151–62. [R.K.R.]

16. Or “dig a trench around,” which may in fact mean “walk around” and refer to the ritual circumambulation. See W. Pax, “Circumambulation,” RAC 3 (1957): 143–52.

17. See l. 33 above.

18. The phrase “with your knees” is a conjecture based on PGM IV. 227–28.

19. Cf. the injunctions to walk backwards at PGM I. 37; IV. 2493; XXXVI. 273.

20. Presumably, the initiate is to turn away from the river after he is out of the water and to depart without looking back at the river. Perhaps he is being instructed to depart by walking backwards. The text is not entirely clear; cf. for similar circumstances PGM VII. 439–40. For looking back and its consequences, cf. the story of Lot’s wife (Gn 19:17, 26) and the injunction in Lk 17:31–32; Mt 24:15–18 (cf. Lk 9:62).

PGM IV. 52–85

*Keep yourself pure for 7 days before the moon becomes full by abstaining from meat and uncooked food, by leaving behind during the prescribed days exactly 55 half / of your food in a turquoise²¹ vessel, over which you are also to eat, and by 60 abstaining from wine. When the moon is full, go by yourself to the eastern section of your city, village, or house and throw out / on the ground the leftover morsels.
 Then return very quickly to your quarters and shut yourself in before he²² can get there, because he will shut you out if he gets there before you. But before you throw out the morsels, fix in the ground at a slight angle a verdant reed that is about two 65 cubits long, tie some hairs from a stallion about the midsection of a horned dung beetle, and suspend / the beetle from the reed by them. Then light a lamp that has not been used before and place it under the beetle in a new earthenware dish, so that the heat from the lamp barely reaches the beetle. Stay calm after you have 70 thrown out the morsels, gone to your quarters, and shut yourself in; / for the one you have summoned will stand there and, by threatening you with weapons, will try to force you to release the beetle. But remain calm, and do not release it until he gives you a response; then release it right away. And every day during the period of purification when you are about to eat and to go to bed, speak the following spell 7 75 times (you are to say them again / when you return to your quarters after throwing out the food). Keep it secret: “You with the wooden neck, you with the clay (?)
 face,²³ come in to me, for I am Sabertoush, the great god who is in heaven.”

The phylactery for the foregoing: With blood from the hand or foot of a preg-80 nant woman, / write the name²⁴ given below on a clean piece of papyrus; then tie it about your left arm by a linen cord and wear it. Here is what is to be written:
 “SHTËIT CHIEN TENHA, I bind and loose.”

The dismissal: When you release the beetle, say: “Harko, Harko is my name;
 Harko is my true name.”

85 Guard these instructions / well. The rite: an onion.²⁵

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr., and Marvin W. Meyer (Coptic sections, ll. 75–77, 81–82, 83–84).

PGM IV. 86–87

Phylactery against daimons:*²⁶ “HOMENOS OHK KOURIËL IAPHËL, deliver” (add the usual), “EHENPEROOU BARBARCHAUUCHE.”

*Tr.: Marvin W. Meyer. This brief spell seems to have no connection with the preceding or following spells.

21. A blue-green glazed pottery, almost certainly Egyptian faience. See A. Lucas and J. R. Harris, Ancient Egyptian Materials and Industries (London: Arnold, 1962) 156–67, esp. 163–64. [R.K.R.]

22. “He” is the one summoned (l. 70), but “he” is never identified.

23. Probably referring to a clay or terracotta figurine on a wooden pedestal. [M.W.M.]

24. The “name” may have included not only sabertoush but also the attached epithets: in magical texts “name” often means “full title.” The Greek προποκείμενον normally means “given above,” but it can also be read as meaning “set forth below.” This latter interpretation (accepted by Preisendanz) would eliminate the apparent contradiction between this and the following sentence. However, the following sentence may be a deliberate contradiction by a glossator. [M.S.]

25. This is probably an abbreviated way of saying, “Use the procedure that involves an onion.”

26. Or “For those possessed by daimons,” which seems the better reading of the papyrus. The manuscript has πρὸς δαιμονιαζόμενον(s). See A. Erman, ZAS 21 (1883): 99 (plate III, l. 25) and Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc. The invocation which begins with OHK is separated by a space and -ζόμενος is written with the same Greek letter forms as the preceding ones. [R.D.K.]

PGM IV. 88–93

* Another,²⁷ to Helios: Wrap a naked boy in linen from head to toe,²⁸ then clap your hands. After making a ringing noise, place the boy opposite / the sun,²⁹ and standing behind him say the formula: 90

“I am Barbarioth; Barbarioth am I; PESKOUT YAHO ADŌNAI ELŌAI SABAŌTH, come in to this little one today, for I am Barbarioth.”

*Tr.: W. C. Gress and Marvin W. Meyer (Coptic sections, ll. 91–93).

PGM IV. 94–153

* Isis is the one who comes from the mountain at midday³⁰ in summer, the dusty maiden; / her eyes are full of tears and her heart is full of sighs. 95

Her father, Thoth the Great, came in unto her and asked her, “O my daughter Isis, dusty maiden, why are your eyes full of tears, your heart full of sighs, and [the . . .] of your garment soiled? [Away with] the tears of your eyes!”

She said [to him], “He is not with me,³¹ O my father, Ape Thoth, Ape / [Thoth], my father. I have been betrayed by my female companion. I have discovered [a] secret: yes, Nephthys is having intercourse with Osiris . . . my brother, my own mother’s son.” 100

He said to her, “Behold, this is adultery against you, O my daughter Isis.”

She [said] to him, “It is adultery against you, O my father, / [Ape] Thoth, Ape Thoth, my father; it is pregnancy proper for me myself.”³² 105

He said to her, “Arise, O my daughter Isis, and [go] to the south to Thebes, to the north to Abydos.³³ There are . . . those who trample (?) there. Take for yourself Belf son of Belf, [the one whose] foot is of bronze and whose heels are of iron, / [that] he forge for you a double iron nail with a . . . head, a thin base, a strong point, and light iron. Bring it before me, dip it in the blood of Osiris,³⁴ and hand it over; we . . . this mysterious (?) flame to me.” 110

“/ Every flaming, every cooking, every heating,³⁵ every steaming, and every sweating that you [masc.] will cause in this flaming stove, you [will] cause in the heart, in the liver, [in] the area of the navel, and in the belly of NN whom NN has borne, until I bring her to the house of NN whom NN has borne³⁶ and she puts what is in / her hand into my hand, what is in her mouth into my mouth, what is in her belly onto my belly, what is in her female parts onto my male parts, quickly, quickly; immediately, immediately. Rise up to the kings of Alchah,³⁷ speak the truth (?) in Oupōke, arouse god [after] NN³⁸ whom NN has borne, and I shall send 120

27. Presumably this is another request for divination (cf. PGM IV. 1–25, 52–85). In fact, the spell is specifically a “divination using a boy,” for which cf. PGM VII. 348–58; also Test. Sol. I. 3.

28. Cf. for this phrase PDM xiv. 96.

29. That is, Helios, the sun god.

30. Cf. PDM xiv. 1219.

31. Or “It is not of my doing.”

32. This episode is also told in a different fashion by Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 14, 356E–F. See Griffiths, Plutarch’s De Iside et Osiride 316–17.

33. Cf. PDM xiv. 628.

34. Cf. PDM xiv. 440–41.

35. Or “sighing.”

36. Cf. PDM xiv. 656–58.

37. Alchah (Egyptian ṛq-bb, “Alxai”) and Oupōke (Egyptian w-pkr) are both sacred places at Abydos. Alchah designates the cemetery where the mummy of Osiris was buried. See PGM XIVb, 12–15 (in the context of PDM xiv. 451–58). [R.K.R.]

38. Or “every god (after NN).”

125 her / to be with NN whom NN has borne. For I am To son of To;³⁹ I am the Great son of the Great; I am Anubis, who bears the glorious crown of Re and puts it upon King Osiris, King Osiris Onnophris, . . . who arouses the whole earth, that you 130 may arouse the heart of NN whom / NN has borne, that I may know what is in her heart for me, for NN whom NN has borne, on this day.”

If a large amount of saliva forms in your mouth as you speak, understand that she 135 is distressed⁴⁰ and wants to talk with you; if you yawn frequently, she wants / to come to you. But if you sneeze two times or more, she is in good health⁴¹ and is returning to where she lives; if you have a headache and are crying, she is distressed⁴² or even dying.

“Rise up to heaven, and arouse the High One [masc.] after the Noble One [fem.].
140 Rise up to the abyss, and arouse Thoth after Nabin; arouse / the heart of these two bulls, Hapi and Mnevis; arouse the heart of Osiris after Isis; arouse Re after the light; arouse the heart of NN whom NN has borne, after NN whom NN has borne.”

[Say] these things on behalf of women. But when [you are speaking] about 145 women, / then speak, conversely, so as to arouse the females after the males:

“When she drinks, when she eats, when she has intercourse with someone else, I will bewitch her heart, I will bewitch the heart of her, I will bewitch her breath, I 150 will bewitch / her 365 members,⁴³ I will bewitch her inner part . . . wherever I desire, until she comes to me and I know what is in her heart, [what] she does, and of what she thinks, quickly, quickly; immediately, immediately.

155 *Nephotes to Psammetichos, immortal king of Egypt. / Greetings. Since the great god has appointed you immortal king and nature has made you the best wise man,⁴⁴
I too, with a desire to show you the industry in me, have sent you this magical 160 procedure which, with complete ease, / produces a holy power. And after you have tested it, you too will be amazed at the miraculous nature of this magical operation.
You will observe through bowl divination⁴⁵ on whatever day or night you want, in 165 whatever place you want, beholding the god in the water and / hearing a voice from the god which speaks in verses in answer to whatever you want. You will attain⁴⁶ both the ruler of the universe and whatever you command, and he will speak on other matters which you ask about. You will succeed by inquiring in this way: First, it is the third day of the month), go up to the highest part of the house and spread a

40. Or “lovesick.”

41. That is, “unafflicted” by the love charm.

42. Or “lovesick.”

43. For a close parallel, compare the lead tablet from Oxyrhynchus published by Wortmann, “Neue magische Texte,” 108–9. See also the Apocryphon of John (NHC II, 1:19:2–14) on the construction of the human body by 365 angels. In PGM the number 365 is commonly associated with the name Abrasax and its numerical value (see Glossary, s.v. “Abrasax”), but also with 365 gods or even 365 knots (PGM VII. 452–53).

44. Or “an expert magician,” as σοφιστής applies to one skilled in his craft. See LSJ, s.v.; Betz, Lukian 10–11.

45. For bowl divination, see R. Ganszyniec, “Λεκανομαντεία,” PRE 12 (1925): 1879–89.

46. Preisendanz suggests that οἶσεις is a late future form of οἶδα. Perhaps one should emend the text to read ὄψεις, “you will see.” However, the future of φέρω can be defended here (see LSJ, s.v., VI. 2–3, where “carry off as a prize,” “win,” “gain,” etc., are given as meanings). [J.P.H.]

After you have said this three times,⁵¹ there will be this sign of divine encounter,⁵² but you, / armed by having this magical soul, be not alarmed. For a sea falcon flies down and strikes you on the body with its wings, signifying this: that you should arise. But as for you, rise up and clothe yourself with white garments and burn on an earthen censer uncut / incense in grains while saying this: 215

“I have been attached to your holy form.

I have been given power by your holy name.

I have acquired your emanation of the goods,

48. The iambic trimeters (ll. 179–201), many of which are metrically faulty, also form the reconstructed Hymn 6. See Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 242–43. [E.N.O.]

49. See on this passage Wortmann, “Neue magische Texte,” 92–93.

50. See for this formula PGM I. 295; XIV. 24 (abbreviated); LIX. 7.

220 Having done this, return / as lord of a godlike nature which is accomplished through this divine encounter.

*Inquiry of bowl divination and necromancy:*⁵³ Whenever you want to inquire about matters, take a bronze vessel, either a bowl or a saucer, whatever kind you wish. Pour water: / rainwater if you are calling upon heavenly gods, seawater if 225 gods of the earth, river water if Osiris or Sarapis, springwater if the dead. Holding the vessel on your knees, pour out green olive oil, bend over the vessel and speak / 230 the prescribed spell. And address whatever god you want and ask about whatever you wish, and he will reply to you and tell you about anything. And if he has spoken dismiss him with the spell of dismissal, and you who have used this spell will be amazed.

235 The spell spoken over the vessel is: “AMOUN AUANTAU / LAIMOUTAU RIPTOU MANTAU IMANTOU LANTOU LAPTOUMI ANCHŌMACH ARAPTOUMI, hither to me, O NN god; appear to me this very hour and do not frighten my eyes. Hither to me, O NN god, be attentive to me because he wishes and commands this⁵⁴ ACHCHŌR 240 ACHCHŌR / ACHACHACH PTOUMI CHACHCHŌ CHARACHŌCH CHAPTOUMĒ CHŌRACHARACHŌCH APTOUMI MĒCHŌCHAPTOU CHARACHPTOU CHACHCHŌ CHARACHŌ PTENACHŌCHEU” (a hundred letters).⁵⁵

But you are not unaware, mighty king and leader of magicians, that this is the chief name of Typhon, / at whom the ground, the depths of the sea, Hades, heaven, 245 the sun, the moon, the visible chorus of stars, the whole universe all tremble, the name which, when it is uttered, forcibly brings gods and daimons to it. This is the name that consists of 100 letters. Finally, when you have called, whomever you 250 called will appear, god or dead man,⁵⁶ and he will / give an answer about anything you ask. And when you have learned to your satisfaction,⁵⁷ dismiss the god merely with the powerful name of the hundred letters as you say, “Depart, master, for the great god, NN, wishes and commands this of you.” Speak the name, and he will 255 depart. Let this spell, / mighty king, be transmitted to you alone, guarded by you, unshared.

260 There is also the protective charm itself which you wear while performing, even while standing:⁵⁸ onto a silver leaf inscribe this name of 100 letters with a bronze stylus, and wear it strung on a thong from the hide / of an ass.⁵⁹

53. Following the emended punctuation by M. Smith, Clement of Alexandria and the Secret Gospel of Mark (Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1973) 221.

54. The sudden shift to the third person in the words θέλει καὶ ἐπιτάσσει seems strange at first, and one is tempted to think that the magician begins to refer to himself in the third person. But cf. ll. 253–54 below, where the same phenomenon occurs with the subject named.

55. That is, according to Greek letters.

56. That is, the spirit or soul of a dead man. See on this primitive concept J. Bremmer, The Early Greek Concept of the Soul (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1983) 70–124: “The Soul of the Dead.”

57. At this point the revelatory dialogue comes into the picture. Cf. Corp. Herm. I.3, 27, 30. Cf. P. Perkins, The Gnostic Dialogue: The Early Church and the Crisis of Gnosticism (New York: Paulist Press, 1980), where further literature can be found.

58. The Greek is obscure at this point. The translation follows Preisendanz: “auch wenn du stehend agierst.”

59. The ass is the animal associated with Seth/Typhon. See Glossary, s.v.

Spell for picking a plant:⁶⁴ Use it before sunrise. The spell to be spoken: "I am picking you, such and such a plant, with my five-fingered hand, I, NN, and I am bringing you home so that you may work for me for a certain purpose. I adjure you by the undefiled / name of the god: if you pay no heed to me, the earth which 290 produced you will no longer be watered as far as you are concerned—ever in life

60. The following dactylic hexameters also form the reconstructed Hymn 7. See Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 243–44. Here and elsewhere σέ is considered long metri gratia, contrary to classical usage. [E.N.O.]

61. The papyrus reads ὀργίλον, which the editors of Hymn 7 have obelized. Here in IV. 262 Preisendanz has emended and reads ὄπλον, while others have suggested such words as ὄρμον (Wünsch), κόσμον (Dieterich), etc. The translation here has retained the reading of the papyrus. For διέπω and its meaning here, see Bauer, s.v. [E.N.O.]

62. The papyrus has δῆλον, which Preisendanz retains both here and in Hymn 7 where he obelizes it. Kroll's emendation ἄδῆλον is paleographically sound, for "A" could have been omitted before "Δ." Second, ἄδῆλον is a good parallel to ἀμήχανον, and third, the idea of ἄδῆλον fits Seth/Typhon, who is regularly associated with darkness, shadows, etc. Cf., e.g., Plurarch, De Is. et Os. 2, 351F; 44, 368F, and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 468. [E.N.O.]

63. Preisendanz reads at this point ἐπ' εὐκταίων Μοιρῶν, "over the Moirai invoked in prayer." In the reconstructed Hymn 7 (Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 244), Heitsch reads ἐπευκταίων Μοιρῶν, "of the longed-for Moirai," originally a proposal by Dieterich (see the apparatus to PGM IV. 271).

64. For this type of ritual, see F. Pfister, "Pflanzenaberglaube," PRE 19 (1938): 1446–56.

PGM IV. 296–466

*Wondrous spell for binding a lover: Take wax [or clay] from a potter’s wheel and make two figures, a male and a female. Make the male in the form of Ares fully 300 armed, holding a sword / in his left hand and threatening to plunge it into the right side of her neck. And make her⁶⁶ with her arms behind her back and down on her knees. And you are to fasten the magical material on her head or neck. Write on the 305 figure of the woman being attracted as follows: On the head: / “ISEĒ IAŌ ITHI OUNE BRIDŌ LŌTHIŌN NEBOUTOSOUALĒTH”; on the right ear: “OUER MĒCHAN”; on the left ear: “LIBABA ŌIMATHOTHŌ”; on the face: “AMOUNABREŌ”; on the right 310 eye: / “ŌRORMOTHIO AĒTH”; on the other: “CHOBŌUE”; on the right shoulder:
“ADETA MEROU”; on the right arm: “ENE PSA ENESGAPH”; on the other: “MEL-315 CHIOU MELCHIEDIA”; on the hands: / “MELCHAMELCHOU AĒL”; on the breast:
the name, on her mother’s side, of the woman being attracted; on the heart: “BAL-AMIN THŌOUTH”; and below the lower belly: “AŌBĒS AŌBAR”; on the pudenda:
320 “BLICHIANEOI OΥŌIA”; on the buttocks: “PISSADARA”; on / the sole of the right foot: “ELŌ”; on the sole of the other one: “ELŌAIAOE.”

And take thirteen copper needles and stick 1 in the brain while saying, “I am piercing your brain, NN”; and stick 2 in the ears and 2 in the eyes and 1 in the 325 mouth and 2 / in the midriff and 1 in the hands and 2 in the pudenda and 2 in the soles, saying each time, “I am piercing such and such a member of her, NN, so that she may remember no one but me, NN, alone.”

330 And take a lead tablet⁶⁷ and write the same / spell and recite it. And tie the lead leaf to the figures with thread from the loom after making 365 knots while saying as you have learned, “ABRASAX, hold her fast!” You place it, as the sun is setting, beside the grave of one who has died untimely or violently, placing beside it also the seasonal flowers.

335 The spell to be written / and recited is: “I entrust this binding spell to you, chthonic gods, HYESEMIGADŌN and KORĒ PERSEPHONE ERESCHIGAL and ADONIS the BARBARITHA, infernal HERMES THŌOUTH PHŌKENTAZEPSEU AERCHTHAholds the keys to Hades, to infernal gods and daimons, to men and women who have died untimely deaths, to youths and maidens, from year to year, month to 345 month, day to day, / hour to hour. I adjure all daimons in this place to stand as assistants beside this daimon. And arouse yourself for me,⁶⁸ whoever you are, whether male or female,⁶⁹ and go to every place and into every quarter and to every 350 house, and attract / and bind her. Attract her, NN, whom NN bore and whose

65. The sudden shift to the plural τελέσατε is strange. Preisendanz suggests that δαίμονες is the subject, but no daimons appear in the spell. Can the subject be the vores magicæ themselves? [E.N.O.]

66. A figurine similar to the one described here, together with a lead tablet containing an inscription nearly identical to that of ll. 335–406, has been found in Egypt. See S. Kambitsis, “Une nouvelle tablette magique d’Égypte, Musée du Louvre, Inv. E 27145, 3^e/4^e siècle,” BIFAO 76 (1976): 213–23 and plates.

69. Egyptian lists of demons and demon-induced diseases carefully distinguish between male and female. For a characteristic example, see S. Sauneron, Le Papyrus magique illustré de Brooklyn (Brooklyn: The Brooklyn Museum, 1970) 6–11. [R.K.R.]

magical material you possess. Let her be in love with me, NN whom she, NN bore. Let her not be had in a promiscuous way,⁷⁰ let her not be had in her ass, nor let her do anything with another man for pleasure, just with me alone, NN, so that she, NN, be unable either to drink or eat, that she not / be contented, not be strong, not have peace of mind, that she, NN, not find sleep without me, NN, because I adjure you by the name that causes fear and trembling, the name at whose sound the earth opens, the name at whose terrifying sound the daimons are terrified, / the name at whose sound rivers and rocks burst assunder. I adjure you, god of the dead, whether male or female, by BARBARITHA CHENMBRA BAROUCHAMBRA and by the ABRAT ABRASAX SESENGEN BARPHARANGGĒS and by the glorious AŌIA / MARI and by the MARMAREŌTH MARMARAUŌTH MARMARAŌTH MARECHTHANA AMARZA MARIBEŌTH; do not fail, god of the dead, to heed my commands and names, but just arouse yourself from the repose which holds you, / whoever you are, whether male or female, and go to every place, into every quarter, into every house, and attract her, NN, to me and with a spell keep her from eating and drinking, and do not allow her, NN, to accept for pleasure the attempt of another man, / not even that of her own husband, just that of mine, NN. Instead, drag her, NN, by the hair, by her heart, by her soul, to me, NN, at every hour of life, day and night, until she comes to me, NN, and may she, NN, remain / inseparable from me. Do this, bind her for all the time of my life and help force her, NN to be serviceable to me, NN, and let her not frolic away from me for even one hour of life. If you accomplish this for me, I will quickly allow you your repose. / For I am BARBAR ADŌNAI who hides the stars, who controls the brightly shining heaven, the lord of the world, ATHTHOUIN IATHOUIN SELBIOUŌTH AŌTH SARBATHIOUTH IATHTHIERATH ADŌNAI IA ROURA BIA BI BIOTHĒ ATHŌTH / SABAŌTH ĒA NIAPHA AMARACHTHI SATAMA ZAUATHTHEIĒ SERPHO IALADA IALĒ SBĒSI IATHTHA MARADTHA ACHILTH-THEE CHOŌŌ OĒ ĒACHŌ KANSAOSA ALKMOURI THYR THAŌS SIECHĒ. I am THOTH OSŌMAI; / attract her, bind her, NN, filled with love, desire and yearning for NN (add the usual), because I adjure you, god of the dead, by the fearful, great IAEŌ BAPH RENEMOUN OTHI LARIKRIPHIA EYEAIPHIRKIRALITHON YOMEN ER PHABŌEAI, / so that you attract her, NN, to me and join head to head and fasten lip to lip and join belly to belly and draw thigh close to thigh and fit black together with black, and let her, NN, carry out her own sex acts / with me, NN, for all eternity.

Then write on the other side of the tablet the heart and the characters as they are below:

435 Prayer that belongs to the procedure: At sunset, while holding / the magical material from the tomb, say:

“Borne⁷¹ on the breezes of the wandr’ing winds,
Golden-haired Helios, who wield the flame’s
Unresting fire, who turn in lofty paths
Around the great pole, who create all things
Yourself which you again reduce to nothing, /
440 From whom, indeed, all elements have been Arranged to suit your laws which nourish all
The world with its four yearly turning points.
Hear, blessed one, for I call you who rule Heaven and earth, Chaos and Hades, where Men’s daimons dwell who once gazed on the light, /
445 And even now I beg you, blessed one,
Unfailing one, the master of the world,
If you go to the depths of earth and search
The regions of the dead, send this daimon,
From whose body I hold this remnant in my hands,
To her, NN, at midnight hours,
To move by night to orders ’neath your force, /
450 That all I want within my heart he may Perform for me; and send him gentle, gracious
And pondering no hostile thoughts toward me,
And be not angry at my potent chants,
For you yourself arranged these things among Mankind for them to learn about the threads
Of the Moirai, and this with your advice. /
455 I call your name, Horus,⁷² which is in number Equivalent to those of the Moirai,

ACHAIPHŌ THŌTHŌ PHILACHA AIĒ ĒIA IAĒ ĒIA THŌTHŌ PHILACHA.

Be kind to me, forefather, scion of
The world, self-gendered, fire-bringer, aglow
Like gold, shining on mortals, master of 460 The world, / daimon of restless fire, unfailing,
With gold disk, sending earth pure light in beams.

71. The following dactylic hexameters are part of the reconstructed Hymn 4 (Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 239–40): v. 1–17, 20, 22–28. For other versions and sections of Hymn 4, see PGM I. 315–27; IV. 1957–89; VIII. 74–80. [E.N.O.]

72. For Horus equated with Helios, cf. PGM IV. 989.

Send the daimon, whomever I have requested, to her, NN" (add the usual).

In another version, the name is: "ACHAI PHŌTHŌTHŌ AIĒ ĒIA IAĒ ĒIŌ THŌ THŌ PHIACHA." / In another it is: "ACHAI PHŌTHŌTHŌ AIĒ IĒA ĒAI IAĒ AĒI ĒIA ŌTHŌ-THŌ PHIACHA." 465

PGM IV. 467–68

Charm to restrain anger: "Will you dare to raise your mighty spear against Zeus?"⁷³

*Tr.: R. F. Hock. The same spell occurs at PGM IV. 831–32.

PGM IV. 469–70

To get friends:

/ "Let . . . seize, lest we become a joy to our enemies."⁷⁴

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr. The same charm using a verse from Homer (Iliad 10. 193) occurs in PGM IV. 833–34. Since there the single verse alone serves as a charm to get friends, and since the papyrus manuscript separates all verses with paragraph marks, it seems likely that the following four verses served as separate charms, though the original titles have been lost. Furthermore, since the three verses (Iliad 10.564, 10.521, and 10.572) that follow form a natural grouping in PGM IV. 2145ff. (cf. IV. 821–23), we have preserved that grouping in PGM IV. 471–73, below, though it is not clear whether the copyist inserted these verses here by mistake or whether the reader was to understand from PGM IV. 2145ff. that the spell served as a "divine assistance from three Homeric verses."

PGM IV. 471–73

* . . .

"After saying this, he drove the solid-hoofed horses through the ditch."⁷⁵

"and men gasping out their lives amid the terrible slaughter."⁷⁶

"and they washed off in the sea the sweat that covered them."⁷⁷

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr. This untitled charm contains three verses of Homer that also occur in PGM IV. 821–23 and IV. 2145ff. It is presumed that these verses served the same functions as those listed in ll. 2145ff. See the introductory note on the previous spell. The verses all come from the tenth book of the Iliad and presumably could be read together.

PGM IV. 474

*" . . . Ares endured, when Otos and mighty Ephialtes . . . him."⁷⁸

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr. Cf. the introductory note on PGM IV. 469–70, and see PGM IV. 830, with n.

73. Homer, Il. 8. 424. For the use of single Homeric verses as charms and amulets, see R. Heim, "Incantamenta magica graeca latina," Jahrbücher für classische Philologie, Supplementband 9 (1893), section X: Versus Homericus et Vergiliani (pp. 514–20).

74. Homer, Il. 10. 193.

75. Homer, Il. 10. 564. The referent of "he" is Odysseus in the original context.

76. Homer, Il. 10. 521. Again, the papyrus quotes only a portion of the Homeric text. "Men" is the object of "saw" in l. 520, and it is a kinsman of the slaughtered Rhesus who saw.

77. Homer, Il. 10. 572. In Homer, the referent of "they" is Odysseus and Diomedes.

78. Homer, Il. 5. 385. The papyrus quotes only a single verse and leaves the syntax of "him" unaccounted for. In Homer, "him" is governed by "bound" in l. 386.

PGM IV. 475–829

475 * Be gracious to me, O Providence and Psyche,⁷⁹ as I write these mysteries handed down [not] for gain but for instruction; and for an only child I request immor-480 tality, O initiates of this our power (furthermore, it is necessary for you, O daughter, to take / the juices of herbs and spices, which will [be made known] to you at the end of my holy treatise), which the great god Helios Mithras ordered to be revealed to me by his archangel, so that I alone may ascend into heaven as an in-485 quirer / and behold the universe.

This is the invocation of the spell:

“First origin of my origin, AEËIOYŌ, first beginning of my beginning, PPP SSS⁸⁰ may gaze upon the unfathomable, awesome water of the dawn, NYŌ THESŌ ECHŌ 515 OUCHIECHŌA, and the vivifying / and encircling aether may hear me, ARNO-

520 right hand / and with immortal spirit, the immortal Aion and master of the fiery diadems—I, sanctified through holy consecrations—while there subsists within me, holy, for a short time, my human soul-might, which I will again / receive after 525 the present bitter and relentless necessity which is pressing down upon me—I, NN, whose mother is NN, according to the immutable decree of god, EYË YIA EËI AŌ 530 EIAY IYA IEŌ. Since it is impossible for me, born / mortal, to rise with the golden brightnesses of the immortal brilliance, ŌËY AEŌ ÊYA EŌË YAE ŌIAE, stand, O perishable nature of mortals, and at once [receive] me safe and sound after the inexor-535 able and pressing / need. For I am the son PSYCHŌN DEMOU PROCHŌ PRŌA, I am MACHARPH[.]N MOU PRŌPSYCHŌN PRŌE.”

540 Draw in breath from the rays, drawing up 3 times as much as you can, and you will see yourself being lifted up and / ascending to the height, so that you seem to be in midair. You will hear nothing either of man or of any other living thing, nor in that hour will you see anything of mortal affairs on earth, but rather you will see all

79. The goddess Psyche, “Soul.” Some scholars read Tyche, “Fortune.” On the problem see Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 2, 49–52, 70–72, 230–32. On the “Mithras Liturgy,” see M. W. Meyer, The Mithras Liturgy (Missoula, Montana: Scholars Press, 1976).

80. For the meaning of popping and hissing noises in magic, see Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 40–43, 228–29; R. Lasch, “Das Pfeifen und Schnalzen und seine Beziehung zu Dämonenglauben und Zauberei,” ARW 18 (1915): 589–93. See also ll. 561–62, and 578–79 below, and elsewhere in the PGM.

81. “Spirit,” “breath,” “wind” (πνεῦμα) is one of the four elements.

82. This is evidence that the scribe had at least one other copy of the spell. See Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 4, 221. immortal things. For in that day / and hour you will see the divine order of the skies: the presiding gods rising into heaven, and others setting. Now the course of the visible gods will appear through the disk of god, my father; and in similar fashion the so-called pipe, / the origin of the ministering wind. For you will see it hanging from the sun's disk like a pipe. You will see the outflow of this object toward the regions westward, boundless as an east wind, if it be assigned to the regions of the east—and the other (viz., the west wind), similarly, toward its own / regions. And you will see the gods staring intently at you and rushing at you.

So at once put your right finger on your mouth⁸³ and say:

“Silence! Silence! Silence!

Symbol of the living, incorruptible god! /

Guard me, Silence, NECHTHEIR THANMELOU!”

Then make a long hissing sound, next make a popping sound, and say:

“PROPROPHEGGĒ MORIOS PROPHYR PROPHEGGĒ NEMETHIRE ARPSENTEN PI-TĒTMI MEŌY ENARTH PHYRKECHŌ PSYRIDARIŌ / TYRĒ PHILBA.”

Then you will see the gods looking graciously upon you and no longer rushing at you, but rather going about in their own order of affairs.

So when you see that the world above is clear / and circling, and that none of the gods or angels is threatening you, expect to hear a great crash of thunder, so as to shock you. Then say again:

“Silence! Silence! (the prayer) I am a star, wandering about with you, and shining forth out of / the deep, OXY O XERTHEUTH.”

Immediately after you have said these things the sun's disk will be expanded. And after you have said the second prayer, where there is “Silence! Silence!” and the accompanying words, make a hissing sound twice and a popping sound twice, and immediately you will see / many five-pronged stars coming forth from the disk and filling all the air. Then say again: “Silence! Silence!” And when the disk is open, you will see the fireless circle, and the fiery doors shut tight. /

At once close your eyes and recite the following prayer. The third prayer:

“Give ear to me, hearken to me, NN, whose mother is NN, O lord, you who have bound together with your breath the fiery bars of the fourfold / root,⁸⁴

Say all these things with fire and spirit, until completing the first utterance; then, 620 similarly, begin the second, until you complete the / 7 immortal gods of the world.⁸⁶
 When you have said these things, you will hear thundering and shaking in the surrounding realm; and you will likewise feel yourself being agitated. Then say again:
 625 “Silence!” (the prayer). Then open your eyes, and you will see the doors / open and the world of the gods which is within the doors, so that from the pleasure and joy of the sight your spirit runs ahead and ascends.

So stand still and at once draw breath from the divine into yourself, while you 630 look intently. Then when / your soul is restored, say:

“Come, lord, ARCHANDARA PHŌTAZA PYRIPHŌTA ZABYTHIX ETIMENMERO PHORATHĒN ERĒI PROTHRI PHORATHI.”

When you have said this, the rays will turn toward you; look at the center of 635 them. For when / you have done this, you will see a youthful god, beautiful in appearance, with fiery hair, and in a white tunic and a scarlet cloak, and wearing a fiery crown.⁸⁷ At once greet him with the fire greeting:

 Lord of heaven and earth, God of gods: mighty is your breath; mighty is your strength, O lord. If it be your will, announce me to the supreme god, the one who has been born again from you today, has become immortal out of so many myriads in this hour according to the wish of god the exceedingly good—resolves to worship / you, and prays with all his human power, that you may take along with you the horoscope of the day and hour today, which has the name THRAPSIARI MOR-IROK, that he may appear and give revelation during the good hours, EÖRÖ RÖRE ÖRRI ÖRIÖR RÖR RÖI / ÖR REÖRÖRI EÖR EÖR EÖRE!”

After you have said these things, he will come to the celestial pole, and you will see him walking as if on a road. Look intently, and make a long bellowing sound, like a horn, releasing all your breath and straining your sides; and kiss / the phylacteries and say, first toward the right: “Protect me, PROSYMĒRI!”

After saying this, you will see the doors⁸⁹ thrown open, and seven virgins⁹⁰ coming from deep within, dressed in linen garments, and with the faces of asps.⁹¹ They are called the Fates / of heaven, and wield golden wands. When you see them, greet them in this manner:

“Hail, O seven Fates of heaven, O noble and good virgins, O sacred ones and companions of MINIMIRROPHOR, O most holy guardians of the four pillars!⁹² / Hail to you, the first, CHREPSENTHAËS! Hail to you, the second, MENESCHEËS! Hail to you, the third, MECHRAN! Hail to you, the fourth, ARARMACHËS!⁹³ Hail to you, the fifth, ECHOMMIË! Hail to you, the sixth, TICHNONDAËS! Hail to you, the seventh, EROU ROMBRIËS!”

There also come forth another seven gods,⁹⁴ who have the faces of black bulls, in linen / loincloths, and in possession of seven golden diadems. They are the so-called Pole Lords of heaven, whom you must greet in the same manner, each of them with his own name:

“Hail, O guardians of the pivot, O sacred and brave youths, who turn / at one command the revolving axis of the vault of heaven, who send out thunder and lightning and jolts of earthquakes and thunderbolts against the nations of impious people, but to me, who am pious and god-fearing, you send health and soundness of body / and acuteness of hearing and seeing, and calmness in the present good hours of this day, O my lords and powerfully ruling gods! Hail to you, the first, AIERÖNTHI! Hail to you, the second, MERCHEIMEROS! Hail to you, the third, ACHRICHIOUR! / Hail to you, the fourth, MESARGILTÖ! Hail to you, the fifth, CHICHRÖALITHÖ! Hail to you, the sixth, ERMICHTHATHÖPS! Hail to you, the seventh, EORASICHË!”

Now when they take their place, here and there, in order, look in the air and you will see lightning bolts going down, and lights flashing /, and the earth shaking,

90. For the seven virgins, see the discussion by Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 69–72, who also refers to the seven Hathors of Egyptian religion.

91. This seems to be an Egyptian idea, where three serpents stand for the word “goddess.” One Egyptian Fate, Rmnwtet (Thermutis), is known to have a serpent face. See Erman and Grapow, Wörterbuch II, 362. [R.K.R.]

92. For this Egyptian cosmology, see H. Frankfort et al., The Intellectual Adventure of Ancient Man (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1946) 45–47; D. Kurrh, *Den Himmel stützen. 93. Cf. the Egyptian harmachis, “Horus who is on the horizon.”

94. For a discussion of the seven young men, see Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 70–75. In the Mithras mysteries the seven grades of initiates were each under the tutelage of a planetary deity. See Merkelbach, Weibegrade 13–14.

and a god descending, a god immensely great, having a bright appearance, youthful, golden-haired, with a white tunic and a golden crown and trousers,⁹⁵ and holding in his right hand a golden / shoulder of a young bull: this is the Bear which moves and turns heaven around, moving upward and downward in accordance with the hour.⁹⁶ Then you will see lightning bolts leaping from his eyes and stars from his body.

705 And at once / make a long bellowing sound, straining your belly, that you may excite the five senses; bellow long until out of breath, and again kiss the phylacteries, and say:

710 “MOKRIMO PHERIMO PHERERI, life of me, NN: stay! Dwell in / my soul!⁹⁷ Do not abandon me, for ENTHO PHENEN THROPIÖTH commands you.”

And gaze upon the god while bellowing long; and greet him in this manner:

715 “Hail, O Lord, O Master of the water! Hail, O Founder of the earth! Hail, O Ruler of the wind! O Bright Lightener /, PROPROPHEGGË EMETHIRI ARTENTEPI THËTH MIMËÖ YENARÖ PHYRCHECHÖ PSËRI DARIÖ PHRË PHRËLBA! Give revelation, O lord, concerning the NN matter. O lord, while being born again, I am passing away; while growing and having grown, / I am dying; while being born from a life-generating birth, I am passing on, released to death—as you have founded, as you have decreed, and have established the mystery. I am PHEROURA MIOURI.”

720 After you have said these things, he will immediately respond with a revelation. /
725 Now you will grow weak in soul and will not be in yourself, when he answers you. He speaks the oracle to you in verse, and after speaking he will depart. But you remain silent, since you will be able to comprehend all these matters by yourself; for 730 at a later time / you will remember infallibly the things spoken by the great god, even if the oracle contained myriads of verses.

If you also wish to use a fellow initiate, so that he alone may hear with you the things spoken, let him remain pure with you for [seven] / days, and abstain from meat and the bath. And even if you are alone, and you undertake the things communicated by the god, you speak as if prophesying in ecstasy. And if you also wish 740 to show him, then judge whether he is completely worthy as a man /: treat him just as if in his place you were being judged in the matter of immortalization, and whisper to him the first prayer, of which the beginning is “First origin of my origin,⁹⁸
745 AEËIOYÖ.” And say the successive things as an initiate, over his / head, in a soft voice,⁹⁹ so that he may not hear, as you are anointing his face with the mystery. This immortalization takes place three times a year. And if anyone, O child, after the 750 teaching, wishes to disobey, then for him it will no longer / be in effect.

95. The description of the god Mithras agrees with extant pictures. See esp. the frescoes from Dura Europos, published in M. J. Vermaseren, Corpus inscriptionum et monumentorum religionis Mithraicae (Den Haag: Nijhoff, 1956, 1960); see also the discussion in Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 76–78.

96. For the interpretation of this passage, see Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 76–78, 234; R. Beck, “Interpreting the Ponzia Zodiac,” Journal of Mithraic Studies 1 (1976): 1–19, esp. 2; 2 (1978): 87–147, esp. 120–27; R. L. Gordon and J. R. Hinnels, “Some New Photographs of Well-known Mithraic Monuments,” ibid. 2 (1978): 213–19. Cf. also Griffith and Thompson, The Leyden Papyrus, col. V. 1 with note; cf. Velde, Seth, God of Confusion 86–89.

97. The combination of ζωή “life,” and ψυχή “soul,” suggests erotic overtones (see Juvenal, Sat. 6. 195 for ζωή καὶ ψυχή, and the note on PGM IV. 377). [E.N.O.] In fact, sculptures portraying Eros and Psyche were found in the Mithras sanctuaries at Capua and under the Church of S. Prisca in Rome. See Merkelbach, Weihgrade 22–24, and photos on pp. 68–69.

98. For this prayer, see PGM IV. 486–537.

99. Cf. on this point Firmicus Maternus, De err. prof. rel. 22. 1: lento murmure susurrat, “he whispers with a soft murmur”; Apuleius, Met. 1.3. See also G. Instruction for the rite: Take a sun scarab which has twelve rays, and make it fall into a deep, turquoise cup, at the time when the moon is invisible;¹⁰⁰ put in together with it the seed of the fruit pulp of the lotus, / and honey; and, after grinding it, prepare a cake. And at once you will see it [viz., the scarab] moving forward and eating; and when it has consumed it, it immediately dies. Pick it up and throw it into a glass vessel of excellent rose oil, as much as you wish; and / spreading sacred sand in a pure manner, set the vessel on it, and say the formula over the vessel for seven days, while the sun is in midheaven:

“I have consecrated you, that your material may be useful to me, to NN alone, IE IA ËËË O Y EIA, that you may prove useful to me / alone, for I am PHÖR PHORA PHÖS PHOTIZAAS” (others: “PHÖR PHÖR OPHOTHEI XAAS”).

On the 7th day pick up the scarab, and bury it with myrrh and Mendesian wine¹⁰¹ and fine linen; and put it away in a flourishing bean field. / Then, after you have entertained and feasted together, put away, in a pure manner, the ointment for the immortalization.

If you want to show this to someone else, take the juice of the herb called ken-tritis, and smear, it, along with rose oil, over the eyes of the one you wish; / and he will see so clearly that he will amaze you. I have not found a greater spell than this in the world. Ask the god for what you want, and he will give to you.

Now the encounter with the great god is like this: Having obtained the above-mentioned herb / ken-tritis, at the conjunction [of the sun and the moon] occurring in the Lion,¹⁰² take the juice and, after mixing it with honey and myrrh, write on a leaf of the persea tree the eight-lettered name, as given below.¹⁰³ And having kept yourself pure for 3 days in advance, come at morning to face the sunrise; / lick off the leaf while you show it to the sun, and then he [the sun god] will listen to you attentively. Begin to prepare [the scarab] on the new moon in the lion, according to the god’s [reckoning].¹⁰⁴

Now this is the name: “I EE OO IAI.” Lick this up, so that you may be protected; and rolling up the leaf /, throw it into the rose oil. Many times have I used the spell, and have wondered greatly.

But the god said to me:

“Use the ointment no longer, but, after casting it into the river, [you must] consult while wearing the great mystery / of the scarab revitalized through the 25 living birds,¹⁰⁵ and consult once a month, at full moon, instead of 3 times a year.”

The ken-tritis plant grows from the month of Payni, in the regions of the / black earth, and is similar to the erect verbenia. This is how to recognize it: an ibis wing is dipped at its black tip and smeared with the juice, and the feathers fall off when touched. After the lord / pointed this out, it was found in Menelaitis in Phalagry, at the river banks, near the besas plant. It is of a single stem, and reddish down to the root; and the leaves are rather crinkled and have fruit / like the tip of wild asparagus. It is similar to the so-called talapēs, like the wild beet.

100. Literally, “at the seizure of the moon,” probably designating the new moon.

101. Cf. PGM I. 85–86 and n.

102. That is, at the new moon.

103. See PGM IV. 788.

104. The new moon of god, according to the heavens, in contrast to the new moon of man, according to the calendar.

105. The allusion to the twenty-five birds is obscure; it may be related to the hours, so that the scarab Khepri is reborn in the first hour of a new day, after the passage of twelve hours of day and twelve hours of night during the previous day.

Now the phylacteries require this procedure: copy that for the right [arm] onto 815 the skin / of a black sheep, with myrrh ink, and after tying it with sinews of the same animal, put it on; and copy that [for] the left [arm] onto the skin of a white sheep, and use the same procedure. The left one is very full of "PROSTHY-820 MĒRI" /, and has this memorandum:¹⁰⁶

"So speaking, he drove through the trench the single-hoofed horses."¹⁰⁷

"And men gasping among grievous slaughters."¹⁰⁸

"And they washed off their profuse sweat in the sea."¹⁰⁹

"You will dare to lift up your mighty spear against Zeus."¹¹⁰

825 / Zeus went up the mountain with a golden bullock and a silver dagger. Upon all he bestowed a share, only to Amara did he not give, but he said:¹¹¹

"Let go of what you have, and then you will receive, PSINÖTHER NÖPSITHER THERNÖPSI" (add the usual).¹¹²

106. The relationship of the poetic quotations in the following, which repeat those in ll. 468–74, and the Mithras liturgy is obscure. They seem unrelated; see Wessely, Griechische Zauberpapyrus (see above, Introduction, n. 24), which shows a blank after l. 820 and a sign indicating a new paragraph. For a different view, cf. Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie 84. [M.S.]

107. Homer, Il. 10. 564.

108. Homer, Il. 10. 521.

109. Homer, Il. 10. 572.

110. Homer, Il. 8. 424. See PGM IV. 467–68 above and 830–31 below. Probably this verse served as a spell to restrain anger, but it may be misplaced here.

111. That these verses are part of the ὑπόμνημα ("the memorandum," l. 821) seems unlikely. More probably, a heading has been lost, and the verses contain an altogether independent spell. Story spells (historiolae) were ancient (see Faulkner, Coffin Texts, nos. 7, 75, 148, 154, 157, 158, etc.). They usually tell of a happening such as they are meant to produce (cf., e.g., PGM VII. 199–201; IV. 1471–79). This story tells of a person compelled or bribed to give up something; it could have been used to make a person give up anger. Hence it may have been attached to the Homeric verse for that purpose and was interpolated here. The name Amara is obscure; it could mean "the bitter woman" (Hebrew or Latin; cf. Ru 1:20, Vulgate).

112. Cf. Pistis Sophia 136 and 142, also with permutations of ΙΑΘ. PSINÖTHER is Egyptian for "the sons of god." [R.K.R.] See also PGM III. 186 and n. See Glossary, s.v. "THERNOPSI formula."

113. Homer, Il. 5. 385. The same verse occurs in PGM IV. 474.

114. Homer, Il. 6. 424, quoted also PGM IV. 468, 824.

115. Homer, Il. 10. 193. See PGM IV. 470, where the same verse is quoted.

then to Helios 19 months, which would be 57 years 8 months. In this period assigned to Helios, that is to the 19 months, devote yourself to what you seek. Then to Zeus 12 months, which would be 62 years. They are good. Then to Kronos 30 months, which would be 64½ years. They are bad for the body; within them also are the dangerous points.

123. The translation of this difficult term follows Preisendanz (see apparatus ad loc.).

124. AMOUN ËEI is equivalent to Egyptian “Amon comes” (?), with Greek ηελ standing for Egyptian iy. [R.K.R.]

125. Probably referring to barking; cf. PGM IV. 1006.

126. This is equivalent to the type of Demotic spell called ph-ntr-spell, literally, a “god’s arrival” spell. See J. H. Johnson, “Louvre E 3229: A Demotic Magical Text,” Enchoria 7 (1977): 90–91.

127. According to Dornseiff, Das Alphabet 184, the mystical number is 3663 and refers to BAIN-CHÔÖCH (the numerical value of the Greek letters being 2 + 1 + 10 + 50 + 600 + 800 + 800 + 600 = 3663).

128. Preisendanz ends the hymn at l. 948, but the petition to the god continues through l. 955. Ll. 949–54 include references to the spell for a direct vision, the lamp divination, and the prayer for divine alliance. Thus the present form of these lines comes from the time when the spell was put together. Ll. 949–54 contain vestiges of verse and originally may have been part of the hymn which was composed by the final author; or they may be a prose addition to part of an earlier hymn, perhaps substituting for, or expanding the petition in, the original hymn. [W.C.G.]

129. These dactylic hexameters also form the reconstructed Hymn 3; see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 238.

130. τε, though necessary to the sense, mars the hexameter. [E.N.O.]

131. A possible echo of a pre-Socratic expression, but to the author of this spell this phrase must have had a much different meaning. Preisendanz wants to emend and read Φύσι και πυρός ἀρχή (“O Nature and fire’s origin”), but the emendation is more clever than persuasive. For Physis as a goddess, see PGM I. 310 and n. [E.N.O.]

132. An adaptation of Homer, Od. 4. 458, which in the context of the spell indicates that the author knew not only the Homeric verse but the whole passage as well. [E.N.O.]

 own heart; your name is BARPHANNĒTH RALPHAI NINTHER CHOUCHEI. You who break apart rocks and change the names of gods, enter in, appear to me, lord, you 1025 who have in fire your power / and your strength, SESENGENBARPHARAGGĒS. You who are seated within the 7 poles, AEĒIOYŌ, you who have on your head a golden crown and in your hand a Memnonian staff¹⁴² with which you send out the gods, 1030 your name is BARBARIĒL BARBARAIĒL god / BARBARAĒL BĒL BOUĒL. Enter in, Charm of compulsion: If somehow he delays, say in addition this following incantation (say the incantation one or 3 times): “The great, living god commands 1040 you, he who lives for eons of eons, who shakes together, who thunders, who created every / soul and race, IAO AOI ŌIA AIŌ IOA ŌAI. Enter in, appear to me, lord, happy, kind, gentle, glorious, not angry, because I conjure you by the lord, 1045 IAO AOI ŌIA AIŌ IOA ŌAI APTA PHŌIRA ZAZOU / CHAMĒ. Enter in, lord, appear to me happy, kind, gentle, [glorious,]¹⁴³ not angry” (repeat).¹⁴⁴ Salutation said once after the god enters. While holding the pebble, say: “Hail,

 1050 lord, god of gods, benefactor, HŌROS HARPOKRATĒS ALKIB HARSAMŌSI IAO AI DA/GENNOUTH RARACHARAI ABRALAO; let your Hours which you traverse be welcomed; let your Glories¹⁴⁵ be welcomed forever, lord.”

139. The occurrence of “holy” between “good” and “daimon” makes it doubtful that the familiar Good Daimon is meant. See Glossary, s.v.; see also the apparatus ad loc.

140. Baboons were thought to praise the sun when they chattered at it. For a representation, see A. Piankoff, Mythological Papyri (New York: Pantheon Books, 1957), vol. I, 39, fig. 22 and pl. I. See also Bonnet, RARG 7–8, s.v. “Affc.” [R.K.R.] On the magician’s imitation of the “language” of animals, see Hopfner, OZ I, sections 778–80. Understanding this language of animals belongs to the traditional phenomenology of the “divine man” and magician. See, e.g., Porphyry, De abst. 3. 3, and on the whole topic H. Güntert, Von der Sprache der Götter und Geister (Halle: Niemeyer, 1921); Betz, Lukian 28–38.

141. Preisendanz has ἐάνη θίμω, which should be read as ἐάνηθί μοι, as in PGM IV. 1001, 1006, 1015, 1024, 1041, 1045. [W.C.G.]

142. For Memnon as a deified hero in Egypt, see A. Baraille, Les Memnonia (Cairo: L’Institut français d’archéologie orientale, 1952) 1–21; as recipient of worship, see D. Wildung, Imhotep und Amenhotep (Munich: Deutscher Kunstverlag, 1977) 299, no. 82. [R.K.R.]

143. An addition by Preisendanz in order to conform to PGM IV. 1042. But such consistency is not always to be expected. Cf. ll. 1063–65 with 1079–80.

144. See the note above on PGM IV. 955, regarding the sign for doubling.

Charm to retain the god: When he comes in, after greeting him, step with your left heel on the big toe of his right foot, and he will not / go away unless you raise your heel from his toe¹⁴⁶ and at the same time say the dismissal. 1055

Dismissal: Close your eyes, release the pebble which you have been holding, lift the crown up from your head and your heel from his / toe, and, while keeping your eyes closed, say 3 times: “I give thanks to you lord BAINCHÖÖCH, who is BALSAMĒS. Go away, go away, lord, into your own heavens, into your own palaces, into your own course. Keep me healthy, unharmed, not plagued by ghosts, free from calamity and without terror. Hear me during my / lifetime.” 1060 1065

Dismissal of the brightness: “CHÖÖ CHÖÖ ÖCHÖÖCH,¹⁴⁷ holy brightness.” In order that the brightness also go away:¹⁴⁸ “Go away, holy brightness, go away, beautiful and holy light of the highest god, AIAÖNA.” Say it one time with closed eyes, smear yourself / with Coptic kohl;¹⁴⁹ smear yourself by means of a golden probe. 1070

Phylactery for the rite, which you must wear for the protection of your whole body: On [a strip]¹⁵⁰ from a linen cloth taken from a marble statue of Harpokrates in any temple [whatever] / write with myrrh these things: “I am HOROS ALKIB HARSAMÖSIS IAÖ AI DAGENNOUTH RARACHARAI ABRAIAÖTH, son of ISIS ATHTHA BATHTHA and of OSIRIS OSOR[ON]NÖPHRIS; keep me healthy, unharmed, not plagued by ghosts and without terror during my / lifetime.” Place inside the strip of cloth an everliving plant;¹⁵¹ roll it up and tie it 7 times with threads of Anubis.¹⁵² Wear it around your neck whenever you perform the rite. / 1075 1080

Preparation: Take broad cords of papyrus, tie them to the four corners of the room so that they form an X. In the middle of the X attach a ring-shaped mat made from single-stemmed wormwood. Provide / a glazed lamp¹⁵³ with a wick called reed grass, and rub the wick itself with fat of a black, male, firstborn and first-reared ram. Fill the lamp with good olive oil, and place it in the middle, / on the mat. Light the lamp and stand in the previously mentioned fashion, facing the sunrise, whenever you perform the rite, without distinguishing the days.¹⁵⁴ Purify yourself / from everything three days in advance, and rub the wick beforehand with the fat of a black, male, firstborn and first-reared ram. 1085 1090 1095 1100

Signs of the lamp: After saying the light-bringing spell, open your eyes and you will see / the light of the lamp becoming like a vault. Then while closing your eyes say (differently: 3 . . .¹⁵⁵ after saying 3 times), and after opening your eyes you will see all things wide-open and the greatest brightness within, but the lamp shining nowhere. Then you will see the god / seated on a lotus,¹⁵⁶ decorated with rays, his 1105 1110

146. The translation follows the interpretation by Preisendanz; see the apparatus ad loc.

147. CHÖÖ CHÖÖ ÖCHÖÖCH corresponds to Coptic KÖ KÖ Ö KAKE, “depart, depart, O darkness.” [R.K.R.]

148. An attempt on the part of the redactor of the papyrus text to explain the need for a second dismissal.

149. Powdered antimony used as cypaint.

150. Addition by Eitrem on the basis of I. 1081.

151. A general name for plants that seem to live a long time. See R. Strömberg, Griechische Pflanzennamen, Göteborgs Högskolas Årsskrift 46 (Göteborg: Elanders, 1940) 103.

152. On the Anubian thread, see PGM I. 147 and n.

153. On this type of faïence, see PGM IV. 55 and n.

154. That is, the charm can be performed on any day. For charms that can be used only on certain days, cf. PGM III. 275–81; VII. 155–67, 284–89.

155. The text is obscure at this point but seems to include alternative instructions. See apparatus ad loc.

156. The deity seated on the lotus flower is Harpokrates, invoked here in ll. 989, 999–1000, and 1074–75. This standard depiction of Harpokrates is found in all the media during the Greco-Roman right hand raised in greeting and left [holding] a flail, while being carried in the hands of 2 angels with 12 rays around them.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese (ll. 930–38; 949–1114) and E. N. O’Neil (hymnic sections, ll. 939–48). This spell is a composite, made by combining a lamp divination with a charm for a direct vision and including an introductory prayer for divine alliance. The repetition in the present charm (note especially the two dismissals in ll. 1057ff. and 1065ff. and the explanation in ll. 1066ff.) is a result of the inclusion of similar elements from both of the charms here combined.

For the gesture of greeting, a modification under the influence of Helios instead of the more common gesture of finger sucking, see S. Morenz and J. Schubert, Der Gott auf der Blume (Ascona: Artibus Asiae, 1954). [R.K.R.]

157. The exact meaning of ἀπόκρυφος is uncertain here. LSJ, s.v., II, gives as possible meanings “obscure, recondite, hard to understand.” More likely is the meaning “secret,” for which see Baucr, s.v.; cf. also PGM XIII. 344, 731, 732, 1057, 1078.

158. The term stēlē occurs in the PGM with several meanings. Originally it refers to a plate of stone or metal on which texts could be inscribed (e.g., VIII. 42), but most of the time the term is a literary device suggesting the text was copied from a stone slab. It can also refer to an amulet in the shape of a stēlē (as in PGM VII. 215; see the picture Tafel I, Abbildung 1 in Preisendanz, vol. II).

159. The prayer is addressed to the god Aion (see I. 1164). Cf. Reitzenstein, Poimandres 277–78; Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 200, 208–10. See also PGM I. 309 and n.

161. The prayer is addressed to the god Aion. See Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 198, who compares the prayer with the older form in l. 196–221.

162. For different interpretations and translations, see Reitzenstein, Poimandres 279, who thinks of the god Anthropos, “Man”; cf. also Betz, “The Delphic Maxim,” 169: “I am a human being, the heavenly deity’s most beautiful creation. . . .”

163. Preisendanz prints Δόξα, as if to suggest a divine hypostasis. See also PGM I. 199.

164. The notion of “Wisdom” (Sophia) is here identified with Aion, a unique instance in the PGM. Cf. PGM I. 210, and Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 198–99.

165. Cf. l. 1225.

166. This protective prayer presumes a section describing a gold lamella to be worn as a phylactery. The phylactery contained the hundred-letter name of the god and was worn as protection against “every excess of power” and the “very violent act” mentioned in ll. 1193–94.

167. For the light miracle at Jerusalem, see PGM IV. 3070 and n. See also PDM xiv. 490 and K. Preisendanz, “Zum grossen Pariser Zauberpapyrus,” ARW 17 (1914): 347–48.

1390 Love spell of attraction performed with the help of heroes or gladiators or those who have died a violent death: Leave a little of the bread which you eat; break it up and form it into seven bite-size pieces. And go to where heroes and gladiators and those who have died a violent death were slain. / Say the spell to the pieces of bread and throw them. And pick up some polluted dirt from the place where you perform the ritual and throw it inside the house of the woman whom you desire, go on home and go to sleep.

The spell which is said upon the pieces of bread is this:

 To Famine, Jealousy, to those who died

182. For these names referring to the underworld places of Greek mythology, see Orph. Frag. 1 and 54; Homer, Il. 16. 327; Od. 10. 528; Hesiod, Theog. 515; etc. See W. K. C. Guthrie, Orpheus and Greek Religion (London: Methuen, 1952) 92.

183. The magical words contain some garbled Aramaic. On BASYM, see PGM LXX. 3 and n.; XIII. 147, 593. For an explanation from the Hebrew ba-shem, see G. Alon, Jews, Judaism and the Classical World (Jerusalem: Magnes, 1977) 235–51, esp. 237, 240.

184. The association of Typhon with the constellation of the Bear (cf. PGM IV. 1331, 1335) is Egyptian. The Bear represents the soul of Typhon, the murderer of Osiris. See Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 21, 359D, and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 373.

185. These iambic trimeters (which are sometimes rather clumsy) have been adapted to form the reconstructed Hymn 25, for which see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 263. [E.N.O.]

The words spoken over the offering are these:
 “Chthonic Hermes and chthonic Hekate and chthonic Acheron¹⁹¹ and chthonic /

186. A poetic form of Persephone.

187. These words with some changes are included as part of Hymn 25 (ll. 14–16), and they seem to scan, but without a translation possible for the formulaic terms nothing can be gained by inserting them in the verse section. [E.N.O.]

188. A. Jacoby has proposed (see Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.) that the name is that of the Babylonian deity Omorka. See O. Höfer, in Roscher 3/1 (1897–1902) 868–69, s.v. “Omorka.”

189. The epithet “the Orgogorgoniotrian” signifies one of the Furies (Erinys). According to LSJ, s.v., it is found only here in Greek.

190. The meter breaks down at this point and only by rearranging and omitting words can Hymn 25 (l. 28) accommodate the concluding phrases here. [E.N.O.]

191. The name Acheron refers to the mythical river or sea in the underworld. There is also a connection with the river Acheron in Epirus, where the famous underworld oracle of Ephyra was located. See E. Vermuele, Aspects of Death in Early Greek Art and Poetry (Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press, 1979) 252. The oracle of Ephyra has been excavated; see S. I. 192. The name refers to an old underworld god who had an incubation oracle at Oropos. See R. Herzog, "Amphiaraos," RAC 1 (1950): 396, with further literature.

193. For this epithet of Artemis and Demeter, see Jessen, "Ariste," PRE 2 (1895): 876.

194. These dactylic hexameters also form the reconstructed Hymn 26, for which see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 264. The reconstruction is even more extensive than usual, for in places only faint vestiges of verse remain. [E.N.O.]

195. Aiakos was one of the judges of the underworld, along with Minos and Rhadamanthys. See Plato, Apol. 41a; Gorg. 523c, and W. Schmid, "Aiakos," PRE 1 (1893): 923–26.

197. These lines, which contain vestiges of dactylic hexameters, have been arranged in an awkward verse pattern and accepted as the reconstructed Hymn 27; see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 264. Nonetheless, the translation is prose because the lines have no more of a metrical pattern than many other passages scattered through these documents. [E.N.O.]

 with attracting a woman, we should probably emend here and read τῆς δεινα. [E.N.O.]

226. Again, the spacing has been arranged to show the palindrome.

227. Again, the vax magica has been arranged to show the palindrome.

228. This often attested vax magica can be read as Greek φθισικηρε (φθίω, κήρ), perhaps “destroying evil demons” (cf. φθισήνωρ, φθισίμβροτος, φθισίφρων). [W.B.] See also R. Merkelbach, “ΦΘΙ-ΣΙΚΗΡΕ,” ZPE 47 (1982): 172, commenting esp. on PGM II. 100.

229. Here, βύθιε, “you in the deep,” as well as πελάγιε, “you in the sea” (l. 800), and κρύφιε καὶ πρεσβύτερε, “clandestine and wisest” (ll. 1801–2) are recognizable Greek words, inserted into this series of magical palindromes. Cf. the similar formulas on a lead piece, P. Rein. II. 88, ll. 17–20. See P. Collart, Les Papyrus Theodore Reinach, vol. II, BIFAO 39 (1940): 29–32. [R.D.K.] Cf. also the figure of Bythos in Valentinian gnosticism.

230. This means “power to give”; lit., “what is in her hands.”

231. See also on l. 1717, above. This “sword” or magical formula may be so named because the words to be written on the gold lamella were to be engraved in the shape of, or enclosed by, a “sword.” For a magical gold leaf with a sword, see the facsimile in S. Reinach and E. Babelon, “Recherches archéologiques en Tunisie (1883–1884),” Bulletin Archéologique 1886, p. 57. [R.D.K.]

232. For a discussion of this monotheistic formula, see Bonner, SMA 175–76; cf. H. D. Betz, Exegetisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament I (1978): 969–71, s.v. “εἰς.”

GABRIËL OURIËL MISAËL IRRAËL ISTRAËL:²³³ May it be a propitious day for this name and for me who know it and am wearing it. I summon the immortal / and infallible strength of God. Grant me the submission of every soul for which I have called upon you.” Give the leaf to a partridge to gulp down²³⁴ / and kill it. Then pick it up and wear it around your neck after inserting into the strip the herb called “boy love.”

The burnt offering / which endows Eros and the whole procedure with soul is this: manna, 4 drams; storax, 4 drams; opium, 4 drams; myrrh, [4 drams;] frankincense, saffron, bdella, / one-half dram each. Mix in rich dried fig and blend everything in equal parts with fragrant wine, and use it for the performance. In the performance first make a burnt offering and / use it in this way.²³⁵

And there is also a rite for acquiring an assistant,²³⁶ who is made out of wood from a mulberry tree. He is made as a winged Eros wearing a cloak, with his right foot lifted / for a stride and with a hollow back. Into the hollow put a gold leaf after writing with a cold-forged copper stylus so-and-so’s name [and]: “MARSABOUTARTHE²³⁷—be my / assistant and supporter and sender of dreams.”

Go late at night to the house [of the woman] you want, knock on her door / with the Eros and say: “Lo, she NN resides here; wherefore stand beside her and, after assuming the likeness of the god or daimon whom she worships, say what I propose.” And go to your / home, set the table, spread a pure linen cloth, and seasonal flowers, and set the figure upon it. Then make a burnt offering to it and continuously say the / spell of invocation. And send him, and he will act without fail. And whenever you bend her to your will with the stone, on that night it sends / dreams, for on a different night it is busy with different matters.²³⁸

*. . . instruct no one, for it is very powerful and unsurpassable, effective for everyone / on the same day, absolutely binding, exceedingly powerful. And it is: Take 4 ounces of wax, 8 ounces of fruit from the chaste-tree, 4 drams of manna. Pound each of these fine / separately and mix with pitch and wax, and fashion a dog eight fingers long with its mouth open. And you are to place in the mouth of the dog / a bone from the head of a man who has died violently, and inscribe on the sides of the dog these characters: $\times \bar{Z} \bar{O} \bar{\Pi} \Xi \Psi \times \vee \Psi$ and you are to place the dog on a tripod. And have the dog raising its right paw. And write on the strip of papyrus these / names and what you wish: “IAÖ ASTÖ IÖPHE,” and / you are to place the strip of papyrus on the tripod and on top of the strip you are to place the dog and / say these names many times. 233. For a discussion of these peculiar variants of the name of Israel, see R. Ganshinietz, “Israel,” PRE 9 (1939): 2234; Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism 95. Cf. PGM IV. 3034: Osrac; XXXVI. 259: Astrael.

234. Cf. Sword of Moses 324 n. 70 (see n. 216, above) for a parallel: a silver lamella is given to a cock to swallow, and the cock is then killed. [R.D.K.]

235. The excessive use of $\chi\rho\omega$ and $\chi\rho\eta\sigma\sigma\omega$ is strange. The translation of this sentence is tennative and little more than a paraphrase. [E.N.O.] Cf. the following section and also PGM I. 38; XII. 284.

236. The translation is based on the emended Greek in Preisendanz, but it differs from the German translation (“Erfolg hat aber auch ein Beisitzer . . .”).

237. The translation tries to make sense of what appears to be a corrupt Greek text; it differs from the German translation (“. . . den Namen eines Beliebigen geschrieben hast: ‘Marsaboutarthe, werde mir . . .’”). See the apparatus ad loc.

238. The Greek is ambiguous at this point. Cf. Preisendanz’s translation: “Denn in jeder Nacht beschäftigt er sich mit anderen.”

239. As the text stands, it makes no sense. We should probably follow the suggestion of Preisendanz, who inserts “or he barks” (“oder bellt”), and add to the Greek some such phrase as ἡ ὑλακτεῖ which may have fallen out by haplography. For similar alternative conditions, cf. PGM IV. 131–37; VII. 613–16. [E.N.O.]

240. The dactylic hexameters are part of the reconstructed Hymn 4 (Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 239–40): vv. 1–17, 20–22, 18, 25, 23–24. For other versions and sections of Hymn 4, see PGM I. 315–27; IV. 436–61; VIII. 74–81. [E.N.O.]

246. ἀγῶγῆ is a general term which sometimes, as here, indicates a spell whose primary purpose is not to "attract" for sexual purposes. The same noun, without a qualifying word, is the title of a "Love spell of attraction." For a parallel to the usage of this passage, cf., e.g., PGM IV. 244l. [E.N.O.]

247. The ass is associated with Seth/Typhon. See PGM IV. 259–60 and n.

THŌ; I adjure you, dead spirit, by the powerful and inexorable god and by his holy 2035 names, to stand beside me in the / coming night in whatever form you used to have, and inform me whether you have the power to perform the NN deed; immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly!”

Then go quickly to where [someone] lies buried or where something has been 2040 discarded, if you do [not] have a buried body; / spread the hide under him at about sunset. Return [home], and he will actually be present and will stand beside you on 2045 that night. And he describes to you how he died, but first he tells you if / he has the power to do anything or to perform any service.

And take a leaf of flax and with the black ink which will be revealed to you, paint on it the figure of the goddess who will be revealed to you, and paint in a circle this 2050 spell (and place on his head / the leaf which has been spread out and wreath him with black ivy, and he will actually stand beside you through the night in dreams, and he will ask you, saying, “Order whatever you wish, and I do it”): “PHOUBEL
 2055 TAUTHY ALDE MINŌOURITHI / SENECHŌ CHELĒTHICHITIATH MOU CHŌ ARIANTA
 NARACHI MASKELLI (formula) AEBITHŌ ACHAIL CHAŌSOUNISOU SOUNIARTE

 CHNOUCHIOCHOIME; I adjure [you], dead spirit, by the Destiny of Destinies,²⁴⁸ to 2065 come to me, NN, on this day, on this night, and / agree to the act of service for me.
 And if you don’t, expect other chastisements.”

And when he agrees, rise up immediately and take a roll of hieratic papyrus and write on it with the black ink which will be revealed to you the figure which will be 2070 revealed to you,²⁴⁹ / and write in a circle this spell and offer it to him, and straightway he will attract, even if he is unmanageable, immediately without delaying a single day.

But often there will be no need for the leaf of flax, but in the second spell²⁵⁰ the 2075 papyrus / sheet²⁵¹ is to be placed there after you have commanded the act of service for you. He attracts and causes one to be ill, and he sends dreams and restrains, and he obtains revelations by dreams as well. These are the things which this single spell 2080 accomplishes. Depending on what you are performing,²⁵² / alter only the passage with the usual items.²⁵³ Most of the magicians, who carried their instruments²⁵⁴ with them, even put them aside and used him as an assistant. And they accom-2085 plished the preceding things with all dispatch. / For [the spell] is free of excessive verbiage, immediately carrying out as it does the preceding things with all ease.

Spell: “I say to you, chthonic daimon, for whom the magical material of this 248. See on this concept PGM III. 120 and n.

249. The figure is not extant. See Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.

250. This refers to a variant in another spell available to the author but not included in the PGM.

251. Preisendanz suggests, in the apparatus ad loc., that this sheet refers to the hide of the ass mentioned in IV. 2014.

252. Preisendanz follows the papyrus and reads πρὸς τὸ, τὸ πρᾶσσεῖς, but this is surely impossible Greek. The easiest change is πρὸς τοῦτο ὃ πρᾶσσεῖς, but the sense seems to require something like πρὸς ὃ τι ποτὲ πρᾶσσεῖς, “for whatever you do,” or “depending on what(ever) you do.” [E.N.O.]

253. This is apparently a reference to the formulas given as κοινόν, κοινά found elsewhere in the PGM.

254. Probably this is a reference to instruments such as were found in Pergamon. See R. Wünsch, Antikes Zaubergefäß aus Pergamon, Jahrbuch des Kaiserlich Deutschen Archäologischen Instituts, Ergänzungsheft 6 (Berlin: Reimer, 1905).

SRÖ²⁵⁵ wishes and commands it of you. Fulfill, daimon, what / is written here. And 2095 after you have performed it, I will pay you a sacrifice. But if you delay, I will inflict on you chastisements which you cannot endure. And perform for me the NN deed, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly.”

The black ink of the procedure / is this: The hide is inscribed with blood of an 2100 ass²⁵⁶ from the heart of a sacrificial victim, with which is mixed the soot of a cop-persmith. But the leaf of flax is inscribed with falcon's blood, with which is mixed the soot of a goldsmith. / But the leaf of the hieratic papyrus is inscribed with eel's 2105 blood, with which acacia is mixed.

Do these things in this manner and, once you have performed them, you may 2110 know with what a marvelous nature this process is endowed, since in all case / it considers the implements as the assistant. But guard yourself with whatever protection you want.

And this is the figure²⁵⁷ written on the hide: A lion-faced form of a man wearing 2115 a sash, holding in his right hand a staff, and on it let there be a serpent. / And around all his left hand let an asp be entwined, and from the mouth of the lion let fire breathe forth.

The figure written onto the leaf of flax is this: Hekate²⁵⁸ with three heads and six 2120 hands, holding / torches in her hands, on the right sides of her face having the head of a cow; and on the left sides the head of a dog; and in the middle the head of a maiden with sandals bound on her feet.

And inscribed on the piece of papyrus: Osiris clothed / as the Egyptians show 2125 him.²⁵⁹

PGM IV. 2125–39

*A restraining seal for skulls that are not satisfactory [for use in divination], and 2130 also to prevent [them] from speaking or doing anything whatever of this [sort]:²⁶⁰ Seal the mouth of the skull with dirt from the doors of [a temple] of Osiris / and from a mound [covering] graves. Taking iron from a leg fetter, work it cold and 2135 make a ring on which have a headless lion engraved. Let him have, instead of his head, a crown of Isis, and let him trample with his feet / a skeleton (the right foot should trample the skull of the skeleton). In the middle of these should be an owl-eyed cat with its paw on a gorgon's head; in a circle around [all of them?], these names: IADÖR INBA NICHAIOPLEX BRITH.

*Tr.: Morton Smith.

255. The names come from the Egyptian and mean “Osiris, Good Daimon, great prince” (or “ram”). [R.K.R.]

256. For the application, see PGM IV. 2015, 2220. On the blood of the ass, see D. Wortmann, “Das Blut des Seth,” ZPE 2 (1968): 227–30; also Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 276, commenting on De Is. et Os. 6, 353B.

257. For this figure, see Dieterich, Abraxas 53; Nilsson, GGR II, 499–501 with Tafel V, 2a and 2b.

258. For pictures of Hekate triformis on gemstones, see Bonner, SMA, nos. 64, 66; cf. no. 156; Delarte and Derchain, Les Intailles 189, nos. 252, 253, *254, *254 (bis); Mousterde, Glaive 67–71 (see above, n. 220).

259. This prescription is remarkable because it seems to have been made by a magician who was not an Egyptian. The Egyptian Osiris is presented here in his capacity as god of the dead. For his ability to send demons and spirits of the dead, cf. Pritchard, ANET 16, “The Contending of Horus and Seth,” Faulkner, Ancient Egyptian Coffin Texts I, spell 335, pt. II. [R.K.R.]

260. Reading $\tau\omicron\upsilon\tau\omega(\iota)$ with the papyrus, instead of Preisendanz's $\tau\omicron\upsilon\tau\omega(\nu)$.

- 2140 *Pitys the Thessalian's spell for questioning corpses:²⁶¹ On a flax leaf write these things: "AZĒL BALEMACHŌ" (12 letters).²⁶²

PGM IV. 2145–2240

- 2145 *Divine assistance from three Homeric verses:²⁶³

"After saying this, he drove the solid-hoofed horses through the ditch."²⁶⁴

"and men gasping out their lives amid the terrible slaughter."²⁶⁵

- 2150 / "and they washed off in the sea the sweat that covered them."²⁶⁶

If a runaway carries these verses inscribed on an iron lamella,²⁶⁷ he will never be found. Likewise, attach the same lamella / to someone on the point of death, and you will get an answer²⁶⁸ to everything you ask him. Whenever anyone thinks he is under a spell, let him pronounce the verses while sprinkling with sea water and . . . against enchantments. A contestant with the / tablet stays undefeated, just as also a charioteer who carries the tablet along with a lodestone; and the same is true in court; also, these are the things for a gladiator to carry. Attach it to a criminal who has been executed, speak / the verses in his ear, and he will tell you everything you wish. Insert the lamella into his wound, and you will have a great blessing with regard to your superiors and masters and others as well, for you will have honor, 2170 / trust. It also keeps off daimons and wild animals. Everyone will fear you; in war you will be invulnerable; when you ask you will receive; you will enjoy favor; your life will change; and you will be loved by any woman or man you have contact with. / You will have honor, happiness; you will receive inheritances, have good fortune, be unaffected by potions and poison; you will break spells and conquer your enemies.

Here is the the formula to be spoken when you immerse the lamella.²⁶⁹

261. See PGM IV. 1990 and n.

262. That is, in Greek letters.

263. In the papyrus these three verses from Homer are written in exceptionally large letters. Cf. PGM IV. 470–74; 821–24, where magical power is ascribed to the same verses. See the note on PGM IV. 470.

264. Homer, Il. 10. 564. In Homer, the referent of "he" is Odysseus.

265. Homer, Il. 10. 521. The quotation includes only a portion of the Homeric sentence. "Men" is the object of "saw" in l. 520, and it is a kinsman of the slaughtered Rhesus who "saw." The rex of Il. 10. 521 here and at PGM IV. 822 differs slightly, though not so as to offset the sense of that of PGM IV. 472.

266. Homer, Il. 10. 572. In Homer, the referent of "they" is Odysseus and Diomedes.

267. The use of iron lamellae (as opposed to those of lead, silver, gold, and tin) is comparatively rare in magic (but cf. PGM VII. 382). See the discussion by A. M. Tupet, La Magie dans la poésie latine (Paris: Les belles lettres, 1976) 39–43. An iron lamella engraved with magical words is housed in the Louvre; see A. Dain, Inscriptions grecques du Musée du Louvre: Les textes inédits (Paris: Les belles lettres, 1933) 108, no. 205. [R.D.K.]

268. The Greek verb rendered "you will get an answer to" could also mean "he will hear." Perhaps the former is the correct rendering, and the passage is expressive of the ancient notion that individuals on the point of death have prophetic power (see, e.g., Il. 16. 843–61, where the dying Patroclus prophesies the death of Hector; Il. 22. 355–66, where the dying Hector does the same of Achilles; Sophocles, Oed. Col. 605–28, 1370–96, 1516–55, where the aged Oedipus, his death approaching, delivers prophecies; and Virgil, Aen. 4. 607–29, where Dido utters a prophetic curse shortly before committing suicide. [H.M.]

269. Immersing the lamella is part of the consecration; see S. Eirrem, "Die magischen Gemmen und ihre Weihe," SO 19 (1939): 57–85.

The formula: / “NN, leave the sweet light and also render me whatever service I require of you whenever I call you (add the usual) because I conjure you by the gods of the underworld GOGGYLORYGCHE OMBROLIGMATE²⁷⁰ THOËRYSËRIS. / Render me the service for which I summon you.” Speak this formula that invokes all supernatural powers.

Consecrating the plaque: Go, I say, into a clean room. Set up a table, on which you are to place a clean linen cloth and flowers of the season. / Then sacrifice a white cock, placing beside it 7 cakes, 7 wafers, 7 lamps; pour a libation of milk, honey, wine, and olive oil.

Here is the formula to be spoken when you consecrate the plaque: “Come to me! You who are master above the earth and below the earth, / who look to the west and the east and gaze upon the south and the north, O master of all, Aion of Aions! You are the ruler of the universe, Ra, Pan,²⁷¹ (H)ARPENCHNOUBI / BRINTATË-NÏPHRI BRISKYLMA AROUZAR BAMESEN KRIPHI NIPTOUMI CHMOUMAÏPHI IA IOY IYÏ AII OYÏ AEËIOYÏ BAUBÏ BAUBÏ PHORBA PHORBA OREOBAZAGRA OYIOËEA ER.” Speak too the formula that invokes Necessity: “MASKELLI (formula) IARCHTHA ECHTHABA CHOIX IABOUCH IABÏCH,” and the one that / invokes all supernatural powers.

So much for the ritual of consecration.²⁷² Here are the operations for specific purposes:

For an oracle: Write as follows on a bay leaf in myrrh mixed with blood from someone who has died by violence: “ABRAA, you are the one who reveals all things MARIAPHRAX.” / Then put it under the lamella.

For wrecking chariots: Burn garlic and a snake’s slough as an offering, and write on a tin plaque: ²⁷³ “NEBOUTOSOUALËTH BEU ERBËTH PAKERBËTH and ÏNOUPH; overturn him, NN, and his / companions.” Bury the tablet for 3 days in the grave of someone who died untimely; he will come to life for as long as it stays there.

For spells that restrain: Write on a seashell in the ink²⁷⁴ mentioned below, adding / Typhon’s blood.²⁷⁵ Then you are to bury the shell in the tomb of someone who died untimely, when the moon stands in opposition to the sun. What you are to write is the 3 Homeric verses,²⁷⁶ and the following: “IÏ BOLCHOSËTH IAKOUBIAI IÏ PATATHNAX / ERBËTH IÏ PAKERBËTH.” The lamella is to be carried, as in the examples at the beginning.

For popularity spells and love spells: Write “MYRI MYRI NES MACHESNÏN” on a gold tablet, after putting it under / the iron one for 3 days. When you remove it, carry it, keeping yourself clean all the while.

For fetching spells. Burn roses and sumac as an offering; take myrtle leaves and write on them in ink: “STHENEPIÏ ARRÏRIPHRAÏS YYY / IIII fetch her, NN, for him, NN.” Recite the formula²⁷⁷ and put the magical substance under the lamella.

270. This and the preceding voces magicae can be translated and mean, “you with the round snout,” and “you who lap rain.” [H.M.]

271. The interpretation of the god Pan as Aion and as god of the All is based on the assumed etymology of the name (cf. also PGM XIII. 980: $\epsilon\nu\ \kappa\alpha\iota\ \tau\omicron\ \pi\acute{\alpha}\nu$, “One and the All”). See F. Brommer, “Pan,” PRE.S 8 (1956): 1005–6.

272. See above on PGM IV. 2186.

273. That is, the iron tablet that has been consecrated, not the tin plaque just described.

274. That is, the myrrh ink mentioned at the end of the spell.

275. For the blood of Seth/Typhon, see PGM IV. 2100 and n.

276. See for these verses PGM IV. 2145–51.

*Document to the waning moon.²⁷⁸

Spell:

- “Hail,²⁷⁹ Holy Light, Ruler of Tartaros,
Who strike with rays; hail, Holy Beam, who whirl
Up out of darkness and subvert all things
2245 With aimless plans. / I’ll call and may you hear
My holy words since awesome Destiny
Is ever subject to you. Thrice-bound goddess, Set free yourself. Come, rage against him, NN.
For Klotho will spin out her threads for you.
Assent, O blessed one, ere I hold you
2250 As hateful, ere I seize your / sword-armed fist,²⁸⁰
And ere you grieve, O god in maiden form.
You’ll, willy-nilly, do the NN task
Because I know your lights in full detail,
And I am your priest of good offices, /
2255 Your minister and fellow witness, Maid.
What must take place, this you cannot escape.
You’ll, willy-nilly, do the NN task.
I now adjure you by this potent night,
In which your light is last to fade away,
2260 In which / a dog opens, closes not, its mouth,
In which the bar of Tartaros is opened,
In which forth rages Kerberos, armed with A thunderbolt, Bestir yourself, Mene,
Who need the solar nurse, guard of the dead, /
2265 You I implore, Maid, by your stranger beams,²⁸¹
You I implore,²⁸² O cunning, lofry, swift,
O crested one, who draw swords, valiant,
Healer, with forethought, far-famed, goading one,
2270 Swift-footed, brave, crim/son, Darkness, Brimo, Immortal, heedful, Persian, pastoral,
Alkyone, gold-crowned, the elder goddess,
Shining, sea-goddess, ghostly, beautiful,
The one who shows, skiff-holder, aiming well, ers”), ll. 2186, 2204–5. The “magical substance” is usually material taken from the person to be “fetched.” See Glossary, s.v. “Material, magical.”

278. The correct reading here is Δέλτος ἀποκρουστικὴν πρὸς Σελήνην. [E.N.O.]

279. These iambic trimeters, many of which are metrically faulty or even collapse almost completely, have been adapted as the reconstructed Hymn 17; see Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 250–53. The text is frequently uncertain and the translation is tentative. [E.N.O.]

280. The magician claims later to have done so (l. 2328).

281. For ξεινή τ’ Αὐγή read ξεινήν αὐγήν; see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 251, apparatus ad loc.

282. The conclusion of the line is lost. Here a long list of what seem to be epithets, now mostly corrupt, has been inserted. The translation usually follows the conjectures proposed by Heitsch, although many are questionable.

Self-gendered, wearing / headband, vigorous, 2275
 Leader of hosts, O goddess of Dodona,
 Of Ida,²⁸³ e'er with sorrows fresh, wolf-formed, Denounced as infamous, destructive, quick,
 Grim-eyed, shrill-screaming, Thasian, Mene,
 O Nethermost one, beam-embracer, savior,
 World-wide, dog-shaped, / spinner of Fate, all-giver, 2280
 Long-lasting, glorious, helper, queen, bright,
 Wide-aimer, vigorous, holy, benign,
 Immortal, shrill-voiced, glossy-locked, in bloom,
 Divine, with golden face, delighting / men, 2285
 Minoan, goddess of childbirth, Theban,
 Long-suffering, astute, malevolent.
 With rays for hair, shooter of arrows, maid;
 I²⁸⁴ truly know that you are full of guile
 And are deliverer from fear; as Hermes,
 The Elder, chief of all magicians, I Am Isis' father.²⁸⁵ Hear: Εὐ ΦΟΡΒΑ
 BRIMŌ SACHMI NEBOUTO / SOUALĒTH. 2290
 For I have hidden this²⁸⁶ magic symbol
 Of yours, your sandal, and possess your key.
 I opened the bars of Kerberos, the guard
 Of Tartaros, / and premature night I 2295
 Plunged in darkness. I whirl the wheel for you;
 The cymbals I don't touch.²⁸⁷ Gaze at yourself:
 Lo! As you see yourself, you'll wonder at
 The mirror, love charm of the Nile's goddess,²⁸⁸
 Until you cast the dark light from your eyes.
 What you must do, / this you must not escape. 2300
 You'll, willy-nilly, do this task for me,
 Mare, Kore, dragoness, lamp, lightning flash,
 Star, lion, she-wolf, Αἶϖ ἔϛ.
 A sieve, an old utensil, is my symbol,²⁸⁹

283. The papyrus reads ειδεα, which Wessely, whom Preisendanz follows, emends to Ἰδαία. This epithet means "belonging to Ida," a mountain range in Crete or Phrygia. Cf. PGM V. 455–56; LXX. 14, and Betz, "Fragments," 293 with n. 30; H. von Geisau, "Idaia," KP 2 (1979): 1337.

284. Here the spell that preceded the list of epithets is resumed. Some connective material may have been lost. [M.S.]

285. The elder Hermes is the Egyptian Hermes Trismegistos (Thoth) who was thought to be older than the Greek god. On Hermes/Thoth as the father of Isis, see Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 3, 352A–B, and 12, 355F–356A, and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 263. See also PGM IV. 99–101, where Thoth is the father. On the topic, see also Reitzenstein, Poimandres 136 n. 4; Nock and Festugière, Hermès Trismégiste III, p. cxxvii. [R.K.R.]

286. Reading τό for τοῦτο. That the symbol was the sandal is shown by the later reference to it in ll. 2334–35. The "symbols" of the gods were thought not to be mere signs of them but objects and formulas by which they could be controlled. [M.S.] See also Betz, "Fragments," 291.

287. Reading (δ')οὐχ and understanding the negative to refer to both verbs, as suggested by L. Koenen. The magician threatens to strike: he will not perform actions that would prevent the impending eclipse. [M.S.]

288. Reading Νειλω(ι) Ἰ(σ)ιδος χαριν κατοπτρ(οι)σι. For ἀνθρώπῳ with ἐν, see the Etymologicum Gudianum, ed. Sturzius, 13. 20. [M.S.]

289. Perhaps "you" instead of "my" should be read (also l. 2311). Cf. the similar list in PGM VII. 780–85. [M.S.]

- 2305 And one morsel of flesh, a piece / of coral,
 Blood of a turtledove, hoof of a camel,
 Hair of a virgin cow, the seed of Pan,
 Fire from a sunbeam, colt's foot, spindle tree,
 Boy love, bow drill, a gray-eyed woman's body 2310 With legs outspread, a black sphinx's / pierced vagina:
 All of these are the symbol of my power.
 The bond of all necessity will be Sundered, and Helios will hide your light
 At noon, and Tethys will o'erflow the world,²⁹⁰
 2315 Which you inhabit. Aion's / quaking; heaven Will be disturbed; Kronos, in terror at Your pole²⁹¹ o'erpowered by force, has fled to Hades
 As overseer of the dead below.
 The Moirai throw away your endless thread,
 Unless you check my magic's winged shaft,²⁹² /
 2320 Swiftest to reach the mark. For to escape
 The fate of my words is impossible:
 Happen it must.²⁹³ Don't force yourself²⁹⁴ to hear
 The symbols forward and then in reverse
 Again. You'll, willy-nilly, do what's needed.
 Ere useless light becomes your fate, do what / 2325 I say, O Maid, ruler of Tartaros.
 I've bound your pole with Kronos' chains, and with Awesome compulsion I hold fast your thumb.
 Tomorrow does not come unless my will 2330 Is done. / To Hermes, leader of the gods,
 You promised²⁹⁵ to contribute to this rite.
 Aye, in my power I hold you. Hear, you who Watch and are watched. I look at you, you look At me. Then, too, I'll speak the sign to you:
 2335 Bronze sandal of her / who rules Tartaros,
 Her fillet, Key, wand, iron wheel, black dog,
 Her thrice-locked door, her burning hearth, her shadow,
 Depth, fire, the governess of Tartaros,
 Fearing the Furies, those prodigious daimons,²⁹⁶ / 2340 You've come? You're here? Be wroth, O maid, at him, NN, foe of heav'n's gods, of Helios-Osiris²⁹⁷ and of Isis, his bedmate.

290. Reading κλυζήσει for κουφισει. Helios' light is the moon's because the moon shines with it (see above). He will hide it in the south, because that is where the sun goes to hide in the winter. Tethys is the goddess of the primordial waters. [M.S.]

291. Reading πολον for σου νουν with H. van Herwerden, "De carminibus e papyris aegyptiacis erutis et eruentis," Mnemosyne, n.s. 16 (1888): 342. [M.S.]

292. Understanding μαγείης τῆς ἐμῆς as equivalent to the dative (commendation may not be necessary), and reading ἀναγκασ(θ)ῆς. [M.S.]

293. Reading τῇ δεῖ γενέσθαι for ὁ δεῖ γενέσθαι. [M.S.]

294. Reading σα(ν)τήν with Preisendanz, ad. loc. [M.S.]

295. Reading ἐννευσα for ἐνευσας. [M.S.]

296. Reading nominatives for accusatives. [M.S.]

297. Although the link between Helios and Osiris is possible through the connection with Sarapis,

As I instruct you, hurl him to this ill
 Because, Kore, I know your good and great /
 Majestic names, by which heav'n is illumined, 2345
 And earth drinks dew and is pregnant; from these
 The universe increases and declines;

The translation is based on the edition in Preisendanz, but several emendations by Morton Smith have been accepted (see the notes); see his article “The Hymn to the Moon, PGM IV 2242–2355,” Proceedings of the XVI International Congress of Papyrology, ed. L. Koenen et al. (Chico, Cal.: Scholars Press, 1981) 643–54.

PGM IV. 2359–72

Business spell: Take orange beeswax and / the juice of the acria plant and of 2360 ground ivy and mix them and fashion a figure of Hermes²⁹⁹ having a hollow bottom, grasping in his left hand a herald's wand and in his right a small bag. Write on hieratic papyrus these names, and you will see continuous business: / “CHAIÔCHEN 2365 OUTIBILMEMNOUÔTH ATRAUICH. Give income and business to this plase, because Psentebeth³⁰⁰ lives here.” Put the papyrus inside the figure and fill in the hole with the same beeswax. Then deposit it in a wall, at an inconspicuous place, / and crown 2370 him on the outside, and sacrifice to him a cock, and make a drink offering of Egyptian wine, and light for him a lamp that is not colored red.

PGM IV. 2373–2440

Charm for acquiring business and for calling in customers³⁰¹ to a workshop or 2375 house or wherever you put it. / By having it, you will become rich, you will be successful. For Hermes made this for the wandering Isis.³⁰² The charm is marvelous and is called “the little beggar.”

Take beeswax that has not been heated, which is known as bee glue, and fashion / a man having his right hand in the position of begging and having in his left a bag 2380 and a staff. Let there be around the staff a coiled snake, and let him be dressed in a girdle and standing on a sphere that has / a coiled snake, like Isis. Stand it up and 2385 the older link between Osiris and Re may be of influence here. See A. Piankoff, The Litany of Re (New York: Bollingen, 1964) 19–21. [R.K.R.]

298. Harkentechtha is a male god (see Glossary s.v.); thus he is not to be addressed by “mistress,” a title belonging to the moon goddess of the preceding hymn. See also PGM IV. 2004 and n.

299. Here Hermes is portrayed as the god of merchants and of commerce. See PGM V. 390–99.

300. This name means “the son of the female falcon.” Cf. Jacoby in Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc., who fails to recognize the female definite article, a fact that precludes the identification with Horus, the falcon god. [R.K.R.]

301. LSJ renders κατακλητικόν (spell) “for invoking,” but Eitrem, in Preisendanz's apparatus, is probably right in translating “charm for calling in customers.” See on this point Malcomini, Studi Classici e Orientali 29 (1979): 102; see also PGM CXXIV. 7.

302. The wandering of Isis refers to her as the widow of Osiris searching for his body. See Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 14, 356D–E; 39, 366F, and Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 315, 452. For wax figurines associated with the cult of Isis, see Diodorus Sic. I. 21. 5–6 and the commentary by A. Burton, Diodorus Siculus Book I, EPRO 29 (Leiden: Brill, 1972): 93–94.

 which I found the spell was changed thus: “Harponknouphi” (formula).

* Spell of attraction:³⁰⁸ (implements: those for a lunar burnt offering); it attracts those who are uncontrollable and require no magical material³⁰⁹ and who come in one day. It inflicts sickness excellently and destroys powerfully, sends dreams beau-

303. The clause ὀρυκτόν . . . κεκρυμμένον is obscure and not clearly related to its context. Preisendanz understands the snake to be buried in the basket which is put under the figure. The reference is apparently to the cista mystica which contained the snake and was carried on the head. See Apuleius, Met. 11. 11 and Griffiths, The Isis-Book 222–26; H. Leisegang, “The Mystery of the Serpent,” in The Mysteries: Papers from the Eranos Yearbooks, Bollingen Series XXX. 2 (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1978), 194–260.

304. The papyrus has only here and in I. 3148 ἀγριον which Jacoby emends to (ὄν)ἀγριον, “wild ass.” Eitrem suggests ἄγριον κριόν, “wild ram.”

305. In Greek, “heavenly.”

306. Apparently the papyrus refers to another author by the name Epaphroditos, but nothing is known about him.

307. Cf. I. 2375. See also Reitzenstein, Poimandres 31. The widow and orphan refer to Isis and Horus; cf. PGM III. 542–43. See Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 450. For the importance of hospitality in the myth of the wandering Isis, cf. C. E. Sander-Hansen, Die Texte der Metternichstele (Copenhagen: Munksgaard, 1956) 41–42; Borghouts, Ancient Egyptian Magical Texts 59–62. [R.K.R.]

308. This spell is similar to, and perhaps even parallel to, PGM IV. 2622–2784.

309. The translation of these adjectives is tentative and follows Preisendanz's German translation, tifully, accomplishes dream revelations marvelously and in its many / demonstrations has been marveled at for having no failure in these matters. 2445

Burnt offering: Pachrates,³¹⁰ the prophet of Heliopolis, revealed it to the emperor Hadrian, revealing the power of his own divine magic. / For it attracted in one hour; it made someone sick in 2 hours; it destroyed in 7 hours, sent the emperor himself dreams as he thoroughly tested the whole truth of the magic within his power. And marveling at the prophet, / he ordered double fees to be given to him. 2450 2455

Take a field mouse³¹¹ and deify it in spring water. And take two moon beetles³¹² and deify them in river water, and take a river crab and fat of a dappled goat that is virgin and dung of a dog- / faced baboon, 2 eggs of an ibis, 2 drams of storax, 2 drams of myrrh, 2 drams of crocus, 4 drams of Italian galingale, 4 drams of uncut frankincense, a single onion. Put all these things onto a mortar with the mouse and the remaining items / and, after pounding thoroughly, place in a lead box and keep for use. And whenever you want to perform a rite, take a little, make a charcoal fire, go up on a lofty roof, and make the offering as you say / this spell at moonrise, and at once she comes. 2460 2465 2470

Spell:³¹³ “Let all the darkness of clouds be dispersed for me, and let the goddess ΑΚΤΙΟΦΗΣ shine for me, and let her hear my holy voice. For I come / announcing the slander³¹⁴ of NN, a defiled and unholy woman, for she has slanderously brought your holy mysteries to the knowledge of men. She, NN, is the one, [not] I, who says, ‘I have seen the greatest / goddess, after leaving the heavenly vault, on earth without sandals, sword in hand, and [speaking] a foul name.’ It is she, NN, who said, ‘I saw [the goddess] drinking blood.’ She, NN, said it, not I, ΑΚΤΙΟΦΗΣ ΕΡΕΣΧΙΓΑΛ / ΝΕΒΟΥΤΟΣΟΥΑΛΕΘΗ ΦΟΡΦΟΡΒΑ ΣΑΤΡΑΠΑΜΜΟΝ ΧΟΙΡΙΧΙΕ, flesh eater. Go to her NN and take away her sleep and put a burning heat in her soul,³¹⁵ punishment and frenzied passion in her thoughts, / and banish her from every place and from every house, and attract her here to me, NN.” 2475 2480 2485 2490

After saying these things, sacrifice. Then raise loud groans and go backward as you descend. And she will come at once. But pay attention to the one being attracted / so that you may open the door for her; otherwise the spell will fail.³¹⁶ 2495 except for μονοήμερος which is rendered in analogy to μονόωρος in ll. 2450–51. Cf. also the parallels in PGM IV. 2071–72; XXXVI. 361.

For causing illness: Use these spells, adding, “Make her, NN, whom NN bore, ill.”

310. The prophet Pachrates may be identical with Pankrates described by Lucian, Philops. 34. See K. Preisendanz, “Pachrates,” PRE 18 (1942): 2071–74; Nock, Essays I, 183–84.

311. On the role of the mouse in magic, see W. R. Dawson, “The Mouse in Egyptian and Later Medicine,” JEA 10 (1924): 83–86.

312. On the moon beetle and its association with the moon, see Abt, Apologie 126–27.

313. Although only the general term for “spell” is used here (λόγος), the contents show clearly that the passage is a “slander spell” (διαβολή). Cf. PGM IV. 2622 in the title of a spell. [E.N.O.]

314. For this slander, cf. ll. 2574–2621, below. The projection of a ritual violation onto the party to be affected by the spell, esp. the statement, “It is NN who said that. It is not I who said that,” is also found in numerous older Egyptian texts. See E. Lexa, La Magie dans l’Égypte antique I (Paris: Geuthner, 1925) 56–58; Pritchard, ANET 327 and note b. In PGM cf. also III. 5, 114–15; VII. 593–619. On the whole subject, see S. Eitrem, “Die rituelle ΔΙΑΒΟΛΗ,” SO 2 (1924): 43–61. [R.K.R.]

315. On the “burning of the soul,” see R. Ganszyniec, “Das Märchen der Pythia,” Byzantinisch-Neugriechische Jahrbücher 1 (1920): 170–71. Cf. also Glossary, s.v. “Soul.”

316. Differently Preisendanz, who understands: “otherwise she will die.”

- 2500 / For sending dreams: Say, "Become like the god whom she worships."
For dream revelations: Say, "Stand beside me, Mistress, and reveal to me about the NN matter." And she will stand beside you and will tell everything without deception.
- 2505 Do not therefore perform the rite rashly, and do not perform / it unless some dire necessity arises for you. It also possesses a protective charm against your falling, for the goddess is accustomed to make airborne those who perform this rite unprotected by a charm and to hurl them from aloft down to the ground. So consequently / I have also thought it necessary to take the precaution of a protective charm so that you may perform the rite without hesitation. Keep it secret.
- 2510 Take a hieratic papyrus roll and wear it around your right arm with which you make the offering. And these are the / things written on it: "MOULATHI CHERNOUTH AMARŌ MOULIANDRON, guard me from every evil daimon, whether an evil male or female." Keep it secret, son.³¹⁷
- 2520 The second spell, after you make / the first sacrifice, but it is better for you to say it before you make the offering. This is the spell attached to the first:
 "[I offer you]"³¹⁸ this spice, O child of Zeus,
 Dart-shooter, Artemis, Persephone,
 2525 Shooter of deer, night-shining, / triple-sounding,
 Triple-voiced, triple-headed Selene,
 Triple-pointed, triple-faced, triple-necked,
 And goddess of the triple ways, who hold Untiring flaming fire in triple baskets,
 And you who oft frequent the triple way
 And rule the triple decades with three forms 2530 / And flames and dogs. From toneless throats you send A dread, sharp cry when you, O goddess, have Raised up an awful sound with triple mouths.
 Hearing your cry, all worldly things are shaken:
 2535 The nether gates and Lethe's / holy water
 And primal Chaos and the shining chasm
 Of Tartaros. At it ev'ry immortal
 And ev'ry mortal man, the starry mountains,
 Valleys and ev'ry tree and roaring rivers,
 2540 And e'en the restless sea, / the lonely echo,
 And daimons through the world, shudder at you,
 O blessed one, when they hear your dread voice.
 Come here to me, goddess of night, beast-slayer,
 Come and be at my love spell of attraction,
 Quiet and frightful, and having your meal
 2545 Amid the graves. / And heed my prayers, Selene,
 Who suffer much, who rise and set at night,
 O triple-headed, triple-named MĒNĒ
 MARZOUNĒ, fearful, gracious-minded, and Persuasion.³¹⁹ Come to me, horned-faced, light-bringer,

317. The term "son" seems to indicate the magician's apprentice. Cf. similar references in PGM I. 193; XIII. 214, 313, 343, 719, 755, etc. [E.N.O.]

318. These dactylic hexameters, with the usual mixture of accurate and faulty meter, also form the reconstructed Hymn 20, for which see Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 257–59. [E.N.O.]

 Mother of all, who bore Love, Aphrodite,
 Lamp-bearer, shining and aglow, Selene,
 Star-coursing, heav'nly, torch-bearer, fire-breather, /
 Woman four-faced, four-named, four-roads' mistress. 2560
 Hail, goddess, and attend your epithets,
 O heav'nly one, harbor goddess, who roam
 The mountains and are goddess of the crossroads;
 O nether one, goddess of depths, eternal,
 Goddess of dark, come to my / sacrifices. 2565
 Fulfill for me this task, and as I pray
 Give heed to me, Lady, I ask of you."

Use this for the spells of coercion, for it can accomplish anything, but do not use it frequently to Selene / unless the procedure which you are performing is worthy 2570 of its power. For the hostile offerings, when some slander is involved, use the following stele, speaking thus:

This is the 3rd coercive spell:

"She,³²⁰ NN, is burning for you, /
 Goddess, some dreadful incense³²¹ 2575

 And crab claws, sage, rose, fruit pits and
 A single onion, / garlic, 2585

 And egg of a young ibis.
 And this is sacrilege! She placed Them on your altar; she set

 For you, a vulture and a mouse,
 Your greatest myst'ry, goddess.

LII. 15, where the connection is not clear, however, and esp. Pindar, Pyth. 4; Aeschylus, Suppl. passim.

320. The meter of these lines is iambic tetrameter acatalectic. The passage is one version of the reconstructed Hymn 19; see Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 255–57. The second version, which differs in a number of places, appears just below in PGM IV. 2643–74. [E.N.O.]

PGM IV. 2622–2707

- 2625 *Slander spell³²² to Selene,³²³ which works for everything and every rite. For it attracts in the same hour, it sends dreams, it causes sickness, produces / dream visions,³²⁴ removes enemies when you reverse the spell, however you wish. But above all be protected by a protective charm and do not approach the procedure³²⁵ carelessly or else the goddess is angry.³²⁶

322. See on this term PGM IV. 2475 and n.

323. For a similar slander spell, see PGM IV. 2471–92.

324. The papyrus has ονειροιδανπτει. For conjectures, cf. the apparatus ad loc., and for parallels PGM IV. 3172, 3197. See also K. Preisendanz, "Miscellen zu den Zauberpapyri," WSt 42 (1920): 31–32.

325. Here πραγματεία seems to be a variant for the usual expression πρόγραμμα, "rite."

326. The present tense is strange here; it should perhaps be read μηνει, "will be angry." Preisendanz's translation has a future ring, too ("sonst zürnt die Göttin").

/ Preparation of the procedure's protective charm: Take a magnet that is breathing and fashion it in the form of a heart, and let there be engraved on it Hekate lying about the heart, like a little crescent. Then carve the twenty-lettered spell that is all vowels, / and wear it around your body. 2630 2635

The following name is what is written: "AEYŌ ĒIE ŌA EŌĒ EŌA ŌI EŌI." For this spell is completely capable of everything. But perform this ritual in a holy manner, not frequently / or lightly, especially to Selene. At any rate, burn upon pieces of juniper wood an offering of Cretan storax and begin the spell. 2640

The spell which is to be spoken:

"For³²⁷ you the woman NN burns

- 2675 This, then, is the beneficent offering / which you sacrifice on the first and second coercive). The beneficent offering, then, is: Uncut frankincense, bay, myrtle, fruit 2680 pit, stavesacre, / cinnamon leaf, kostos. Pound all these together and blend with Mendesian³²⁹ wine and honey, and make pills the size of beans.

- 2685 The coercive offering: When you say the foregoing coercive spell / on the third day, also make an offering: it is a field mouse, fat of a virgin dappled goat, magic material of a dog-faced baboon, egg of an ibis, river crab, a perfect moon beetle,

- Another love spell of attraction: Take some Ethiopian cumin and fat of a dap-2710 pled virgin goat / and after putting the offering together, offer it to Selene on the 13th, 14th, on an earthen censer, on a lofty honsetop, on coals. Spell:

329. See on this term PGM I. 85 and n.

330. Cf. on this point PGM IV. 286–87. It is likely that the magician recognizes that he is to perform a “ritual for picking a plant” (βοτανήσας).

331. The ring is supposed to have an image of Hekate.

332. For an example of a phylactery consisting of magical characters, see D. Jordan, “A Silver Phylactery at Istanbul,” ZPE 28 (1978): 84–86.

333. The dactylic hexameters, which are frequently interrupted by voces magicæ and other formulas, also form the reconstructed Hymn 21. See Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 259–60, where the hymn concludes with IV. 2764 but adds 2784 as a kind of postscript. [E.N.O.]

334. Dione is a name of Aphrodite; see LSJ, s.v. Here in this syncretistic hymn the name belongs to Hekate, as on the magical rools from Pergamon; see Wünsch, Antikes Zaubergehörat 23–24.

335. The epithet of Hekate may be related to the frog (cf. PGM XXXVI. 235). The animal played an important role in magic as a representative of the gods of the underworld. See M. Weber, “Frosch,” RAC 8 (1970): 524–38.

336. The use of the name “Lydian” with Hekate-Artemis should be noted in connection with the possible Lydian origin of Artemis. See on this point Chantraine, Dictionnaire I, 116–17.

337. The translation follows Reitzenstein’s emendation (see Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.) of ἀνδναία as Ἀιδωναία. This epithet of the goddess of Hades also occurs in PGM IV. 2855. Cf. LSJ, s.v. Ἀΐδωναιος; Suppl. s.v.

338. Cf. Homer, Od. 9. 75. As the apparatus points out, the verse may be corrupt.

339. φιλότῃτι καὶ εὐνή is a Homeric hendiatys. Cf. Il. 3. 445; 6. 25. See PGM IV. 2910.

340. The voces magicæ here seem intended as a part of the verse pattern and they have, however awkwardly, been treated as such. [E.N.O.]

Beside the doors, PYPYLĒDEDEZŌ

- 2785 *Prayer to Selene for any spell:³⁴⁵
“Come³⁴⁶ to me, O beloved mistress, Three-faced Selene; kindly hear my sacred chants;
Night’s ornament, young, bringing light to mortals, /
2790 O child of morn who ride upon fierce bulls,
O queen who drive your car on equal course
With Helios, who with the triple forms
Of triple Graces dance in revel with / 2795 The stars. You’re Justice³⁴⁷ and the Moira’s threads:

341. See on this point the discussion by Wortmann, “Neue magische Texte,” 101–2. On the subject of madness caused by magic, see J. Mattes, Der Wahnsinn im griechischen Mythos und in der Dichtung bis zum Drama des 5. Jahrhunderts, Bibliothek der Altertumswissenschaften, N. F. 2. Reihe, Band 36 (Heidelberg: Winter, 1970) 44–49.

342. These lines (2764–84) retain some traces of hexameters, but only the last line comes close to being a complete line. [E.N.O.]

343. The formula seems to be textually mutilated. Cf. for similar passages PGM II. 23–24; V. 424–27; VII. 680–83. See Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.

344. ONYX may refer to the stone onyx which was used in magic. Cf. Hopfner, OZ I, section 582.

345. For a discussion of this hymn, see K. Kerényi, “Die Göttin Natur,” Eranos-Jahrbuch 14 (1947): 39–86, esp. 68–79.

346. These dactylic hexameters, some of which show the usual irregularities, also form the reconstructed Hymn 18. See Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 253–55. [E.N.O.]

347. Dike (Justice), the daughter of Zeus, has here and in l. 2860 become an epithet of the underworld goddess. For the association of Dike with underworld deities, see A. Dihle, “Gerechtigkeit,” RAC 10 (1976): 243–45.

348. The reading of the papyrus is uncertain at this point. Traditionally, the names of the Furies were Alecto, Tisiphone, and Megaira (Apollodorus, Bib. I. 1. 4; Orph. Hymn. 69. 2). If the three Furies are intended here, the reading of Persephone will have to be changed to Tisiphone, as suggested by Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc. See also H. Funke, “Furien,” RAC 8 (1971): 699–722, esp. 704–5.

 Night-Crier, bull-faced, loving solitude,
 Bull-headed, you have eyes of bulls, / the voice 2810

 And rule the triple decades,³⁵¹ unto me
 Who'm calling you be gracious and with kindness

 And gods immortal tremble, goddess who 2830
 Exalt men, you of many names, who bear
 Fair offspring, bull-eyed, horned, mother of gods
 And men, and Nature,³⁵² Mother of all things,
 For you frequent Olympos, / and the broad 2835
 And boundless chasm you traverse. Beginning
 And end are you, and you alone rule all.
 For all things are from you, and in you do
 All things, Eternal one, come to their end.
 As everlasting / band around your temples 2840
 You wear great Kronos' chains,³⁵³ unbreakable
 And unremovable, and you hold in Your hands a golden scepter. Letters 'round
 Your scepter / Kronos wrote himself and gave 2845
 To you to wear that all things stay steadfast:
 Subduer and subdued, mankind's subduer,
 And force-subduer; Chaos, too, you rule.

349. The phrase describing Hekate/Artemis as standing between two lions points to the older concept of the "queen of the animals." See W. Helck, Betrachtungen zur Grossen Göttin und den ihr verbundenen Gottheiten (München und Wien: Oldenbourg, 1971) esp. 223–25.

350. Ll. 2819–26 are parallel to IV. 2523–28.

351. For the term "triple decades," see PGM IV. 2527.

352. For the concept of Nature, see Glossary, s.v.; for the epithet "mother of all things" see Orph. Hymn. 10. 1: παμμήτερα. See also PGM IV. 2917.

353. See also PGM IV. 3084–3124 and S. Eitrem, "Kronos in der Magie," Université libre de Bruxelles, Annuaire de l'institut de philologie et d'histoire orientales, II: Mélanges J. Bidez, vol. I (Bruxelles: Secrétariat de l'institut, 1934) 351–60.

2850 ARARACHARA/RA ĒPHTHISIKĒRE.

Hail, goddess, and attend your epithets,
 I burn³⁵⁴ for you this spice, O child of Zeus,
 Dart-shooter, heav'nly one, goddess of harbors,
 Who roam the mountains, goddess of crossroads, /
 2855 O nether and nocturnal, and infernal, Goddess of dark, quiet and frightful³⁵⁵ one,
 O you who have your meal amid the graves,³⁵⁶
 Night, Darkness, broad Chaos: Necessity Hard to escape are you; you're Moira and / 2860 Erinyes,³⁵⁷ torment, Justice and Destroyer,
 And you keep Kerberos in chains, with scales
 Of serpents are you dark, O you with hair
 Of serpents, serpent-girded, who drink blood, /
 2865 Who bring death and destruction, and who feast
 On hearts, flesh eater, who devour those dead
 Untimely, and you who make grief resound
 And spread madness, come to my sacrifices,
 2870 And now for me do you fulfill / this matter."

Offering for the rite: For doing good, offer storax, myrrh, sage, frankincense, a 2875 fruit pit. But for doing harm, offer magical / material of a dog and a dappled goat (or in a similar way, of a virgin untimely dead).

2880 Protective charm for the rite: Take a lodestone and on it have carved / a three-faced Hekate. And let the middle face be that of a maiden wearing horns, and the left face that of a dog, and the one on the right that of a goat. After the carving is 2885 done, / clean with natron and water, and dip in the blood of one who has died a violent death. Then make a food offering to it³⁵⁸ and say the same spell at the time 2890 of the / ritual.³⁵⁹

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

PGM IV. 2891–2942

*Love spell of attraction:

*Offering to the star of Aphrodite:*³⁶⁰ A white dove's blood and fat, untreated myrrh and parched wormwood. Make this up together as pills and offer them to the star 2895 on pieces of vine / wood or on coals. And also have the brains of a vulture for the compulsion, so that you may make the offering. And also have as a protective charm a tooth from the upper right jawbone of a female ass or of a tawny sacrificial heifer, 2900 tied to your left arm with / Anubian thread.³⁶¹

354. The following lines are similar to those at PGM IV. 2522–29, but their order occasionally differs.

355. On δασπλήτη, "frightful," cf. Theocritus, Idyll 2. 14 (said of Hekate). [E.N.O.]

356. On eating amid graves, cf., e.g., Tibullus l. 5. 49–56, esp. 53–54.

357. The goddess is here identified with Erinyes, the avenging deity. This identification is somewhat inconsistent with l. 2798, where the three Furies are named; the same is true of Moira (l. 2859) as compared with the three Moirai (ll. 2795–96). See PGM IV. 1418, 2339; V. 191; and IV. 2798 with n.

358. The term παράθεσις refers to an offering of food. See PGM I. 23, 39; XIII. 1012. Cf. Eitrem's and Preisendanz's translation: "leg ihn (eine Weile) beiseite." Wunsch thinks of the term as a cover ("Hülle").

359. For the meaning of the phrase, see PGM V. 230.

360. The star of Aphrodite is the planet Venus.

361. On the Anubian thread see PGM I. 147 and n.

Compulsion element of the rite:

“But,³⁶² if as goddess you in slowness act,
 You will not see Adonis rise from Hades,³⁶³

 As guard, I’ll bind on him another wheel 2905
 Of Ixion;³⁶⁴ no longer will he come
 To light, and he’ll be chastized and subdued.
 Wherefore, O Lady, act, I beg: Attract NN, whom NN bore, to come with rapid step
 To my door,³⁶⁵ me, NN, whom NN bore, /
 And to the bed of love, driven by frenzy, 2910
 In anguish from the forceful goads—today,

NOUMILLON BIOMBILLON AKTIŌPHI ERESCHIGAL NEBOUTOSOUALĒTH PHROU-

Hymn of Compulsion:

“O foam-born Kythereia, mother of Both gods and men, etherial and chthonic,
 All-Mother Nature, goddess unsubdued,
 Who hold together things,³⁶⁷ who cause the great Fire to revolve, who keep the ever-moving BARZA³⁶⁸ / in her unbroken course; and you 2920
 Accomplish everything, from head to toes,
 And by your will is holy water mixed,
 When by your hands you’ll move RHOUZŌ³⁶⁹ amid
 The stars, the world’s midpoint which you control.
 You move holy desire into the souls
 Of men / and move women to man, and you 2925
 Render³⁷⁰ woman desirable to man

362. This is a curious and confused passage. Ll. 2902–15 contain scattered snatches of verses which are obviously parts of dactylic hexameters. Ll. 2916–28 contain lines which are relatively accurate hexameters, but 2929–39 are a mixture of metrical and nonmetrical lines. Nevertheless, the whole passage has been arranged and reconstructed as Hymn 22; see Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 260–61. Since the tone and purpose of the whole passage seems hymnic, the translation has been made in verse but with an occasional faulty line. [E.N.O.]

363. On the cult of Adonis in Egypt and the problem concerning his “resurrection,” cf. Theocritus, Idyll 15 and, with further literature, Nilsson, GGR II, 35 n. 2; 650, n. 4; Griffiths, Plutarch’s De Iside et Osiride 320–22.

364. Because he attempted to make love to Hera, wife of Zeus, the mythical king Ixion was condemned by being fastened to an ever-turning wheel. The myth of Ixion was very popular in antiquity. See Cook, Zeus III, 2, pp. 200–205 (with plates); P. Weizsäcker, in Roscher 2, 766–72, s.v. “Ixion”; H. von Geisau, “Ixion,” KP 3 (1979): 31–32.

365. Preisendanz states that ἐν προθύροις is a tag from Homer, Od. 10. 220.

366. Two traditional epithets of Aphrodite occur here closely together: Kythērē in l. 2912 and Kythereia in l. 2915. The name may refer to the island of Kythera which was believed to be Aphrodite’s birthplace and which had a temple of Aphrodite Urania. See LSJ, s.v.; E. Meyer, “Kythera,” KP 3 (1979): 423.

367. The reading of this epithet is uncertain. See the apparatus.

368. The word BARZA is Persian and means “shining light.” See Hopfner, OZ II, p. 100.

369. Hopfner, OZ II, p. 100, assumes that RHOUZŌ is confused with the Persian magical word ZOURŌ. See also K. Preisendanz, “Zuro,” in Roscher 6, pp. 763–64.

370. Preisendanz prints πίθησι, the reading of the papyrus, but the third person is certainly wrong here. The simplest correction is that of Wessely: πίθησ σὺ, and that is what is translated here.

Through all the days to come, our Goddess Queen,
Come to these chants, Mistress

ARRÖRIPHRAΣI GÖTHËTINI, Cyprus-born, SOUI ËS THNOBOCHOU THORITHE
2930 STHENEPIÖ, Lady / SERTHENEBEËI, and inflict fiery love on her, NN, whom NN bore,

So³⁷¹ that for me, NN, whom NN bore,
She melt with love through all the days to come
But, blessed RHOUZÖ, grant this to me, NN:
Just as into your chorus 'mid the stars

A man unwilling you attracted to 2935 Your bed for intercourse, / and once he was Attracted, he at once began to turn Great BARZA, nor did he cease turning, and While moving in his circuits, he's aroused:
wherefore attract to me, her, NN, whom NN bore,
To bed of love. But goddess Cyprus-born
Do you now to the full fulfill this chant." /

2940 If you see the star shining steadily, it is a sign that she has been smitten, and if it is lengthened like the flame of a lamp, she has already come.³⁷²

PGM IV. 2943–66

Love-spell of attraction through wakefulness: Take the eyes of a bat and release 2945 it alive, and take / a piece of unbaked dough or unmelted wax and mold a little dog; and put the right eye of the bat into the right eye of the little dog, implanting also in the same way the left one in the left. And take a needle, thread it with the 2950 magical material and / stick it through the eyes of the little dog, so that the magical material is visible. And put the dog into a new drinking vessel, attach a papyrus strip³⁷³ to it and seal it with your own ring which has crocodiles with the backs of 2955 their heads attached,³⁷⁴ and / deposit it at a crossroad after you have marked the spot so that, should you wish to recover it, you can find it.

Spell written on the papyrus strip: "I adjure you three times by Hekate PHOR-2960 PHORBA BAIBÖ PHÖRBÖRBA, that she, NN, lose the fire in her eye or even / lie awake with nothing on her mind except me, NN, alone. I adjure by Kore, who has become the Goddess of Three roads, and who is the true mother of . . . (whom you 2965 wish), PHORBEA BRIMÖ NËRËATO DAMÖN BRIMÖN SEDNA / DARDAR, All-seeing one, IÖPË, make her, NN, lie awake for me through all [eternity]."

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil.

371. The verse resumes here after a few lines of prose; however, the NN-formula does not scan.

372. The last word of this section is either ἤξεν ("she has come") or ἤξευ ("it has attracted"). The magical sense—or the result—is the same in either case. For the rare aorist of ἄγω cf. PGM IV. 2934: ἤξας. Preisendanz prints ἤξεν in the first, ἤξευ in the second edition, but in the index lists the word under ἤκω. [E.N.O.]

373. πιττακίζω means "attach a label" (LSJ, s.v.) in the sense of attaching a papyrus strip on which writing is placed; cf. below, ll. 2956–66. [E.N.O.]

374. Whether this means "head to head" (thus Preisendanz) or "tail to tail" (thus LSJ) or "head to tail" is uncertain. Paired crocodiles appear on seals in all these positions, but head to tail is far more frequent. [M.S.] The crocodile was sacred to Sobek, with whose cult sacred prostitution seems to have been associated. Thus there may be a link with the erotic theme of this spell. See H. Thompson, "Two Demotic Self-Dedications," JEA 26 (1940): 68–78. [R.K.R.]

PGM IV. 2967–3006

* Among the Egyptians herbs are always obtained like this: ³⁷⁵ the herbalist first purifies his own body, then sprinkles with natron ³⁷⁶ and / fumigates the herb with resin from a pine tree after carrying it around the place 3 times. ³⁷⁷ Then, after burning kyphi and pouring the libation of milk as he prays, he pulls up the plant while invoking by name the daimon to whom the herb / is being dedicated and calling upon him to be more effective for the use for which it is being acquired. 2970 2975

The invocation for him, which he speaks over any herb, generally at the moment of picking, is as follows: ³⁷⁸

“You were sown by Kronos, you were conceived by Hera, / you were maintained by Ammon, you were given birth by Isis, you were nourished by Zeus the god of rain, you were given growth by Helios and dew. ³⁷⁹ You [are] the dew of all the gods, you [are] the heart of Hermes, you are the seed of the primordial gods, you are the eye / of Helios, ³⁸⁰ you are the light of Selene, ³⁸¹ you are the zeal of Osiris, ³⁸² you are the beauty and the glory of Ouranos, you are the soul of Osiris’ daimon which revels in every place, you are the spirit of Ammon. As you have exalted Osiris, so / exalt yourself and rise just as Helios rises each day. Your size is equal to the zenith of Helios, your roots come from the depths, but your powers are in the heart of Hermes, your fibers are the bones of Mnevis, ³⁸³ and your / flowers are the eye of Horus, ³⁸⁴ your seed is Pan’s seed. I am washing you in resin as I also wash the gods ³⁸⁵ even [as I do this] for my own health. You also be cleaned by prayer and give us power as Ares and Athena do. I am Hermes. I am acquiring you with Good / Fortune and Good Daimon both at a propitious hour and on a propitious day that is effective for all things.” 2980 2985 2990 2995 3000

After saying this, he rolls the harvested stalk in a pure linen cloth (but into the place of its roots they threw seven seeds of wheat and an equal number of barley, after mixing them with honey), / and after pouring in the ground which has been dug up, he departs. 3005

395. Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East 261, n. 11, derives these names of demons from LXX Gn 15: 20–21; Ex 3: 8, 17, etc.: The Χετταῖοι have become Χερσαῖος (“land daimon”), the Φερεζαῖοι have become Φαρισαῖος (which therefore has been confused with Pharisee), and the Ἰεβουσαῖοι have become Ἐβουσαῖος. PGM IV. 3209–54

3210 Saucer divination of Aphrodite*: Having kept oneself pure for 7 / days, take a white saucer, fill it with water and olive oil, having previously written on its base with myrrh ink: “ĒIOCH CHIPHA ELAMPSĒR ZĒL A Ē Ē I O Y Ō” (25 letters); and beneath the base, on the outside: “TACHIĒL CHTHONIĒ DRAXŌ” (18 letters). Wax over / with white wax. On the outside of the rim at the top: “TERMI PHILŌ 6 ERIKŌMA DERKŌ MALŌK GAULĒ APHRIĒL I ask” (say it 3 times). Let it rest on the floor and looking intently at it, say “I call upon you, the mother and mistress / of nymphs,⁴²⁴ ILAOUCH OBRIĒ LOUCH TLOR; [come] in, holy light, and give answer, showing your lovely shape.”

3225 Then look intently at the bowl. When you see her, welcome her and say, “Hail, very glorious goddess, ILARA / OUCH. And if you give me a response, extend your hand.” And when she extends it, expect answers to your inquiry.

3230 But if she does not listen say, “I call upon the ILAOUCH who has begotten Himeros,⁴²⁵ the lovely Horai and / you Graces; I also call upon the Zeus-sprung Physis of all things, two-formed, indivisible, straight, foam-beautiful Aphrodite. 3235 Reveal to me your lovely light and your lovely face, O mistress ILAOUCH. / I conjure you, giver of fire, [by] ELGINAL, and [by the] great names OBRIĒTYCH KERDYNOUCHILĒPSIN NIOU NAUNIN IOUTHOU THRIGX TATIOUTH GERTIATH GERGERIS 3240 GERGERIĒ THEITHI. I also ask you⁴²⁶ [by] the all wonderful / names, OISIA EI EI AŌ ĒY AAŌ IŌIAIAIŌ SŌTHOU BERBROI AKTEROBORE⁴²⁷ GERIĒ IĒOYA; bring me light and your lovely face and the true saucer divination, you shining with fire, bearing fire all around, stirring the land from afar, / IŌ IŌ PHTHAIE THOUTHOI PHA- 3245 EPHI. Do it.”

Preparation: having kept yourself pure, as you learned, take a bronze drinking cup, and write with myrrh ink the previously inscribed stele which calls upon Aphrodite, / and use the untouched olive oil and clean river water. Put the drinking cup on your knees and speak over it the stele mentioned above, and the goddess will appear to you and will reveal concerning what things you wish.

424. For the epithet “Mistress of the Nymphs,” see Orph. Hymn. 52. 22–25. Aphrodite Nymphaia is discussed in Pausanias 2. 32. 7.

425. Himeros may be a personification of “the yearning of love.” See LSJ, s.v. “ἔμερος,” I. 3.

426. ἀξιῶσης, “you might ask,” could be emended to ἀξιῶ σέ, “I ask you,” and perhaps read with the following imperative as a part of the conjuration set in quotation marks. [R.D.K.]

the “E” with enjoyment, aspirating it, /

428. The repeated “great, great” is Egyptian geminatio. See also PGM I. 41 and n.

429. E. Hohl, RhM 68 (1913): 313, n. 4, restores [π]αναγρυστιαν in accordance with Anth. Pal. 7. 195. 5, where Meleager has used παναγρυστινοιο μερίμνης. Both the noun and the verb are hapax legomena. [E.N.O.]

430. Mendes corresponds to Egyptian B3-nb-Dd.t, the ram incarnation of Prē identified with Pan and Priapus. See Bonnet, RARG 451, s.v. “Mendes”; 868–71, s.v. “Widdcr”; Herodotus 2. 46; Diodorus Sic. 1. 88; Strabo 16. 1. 19. [R.K.R.]

431. The translation follows Preisendanz in assuming that αὐτῇ in ll. 3273–74 is τῇ δεινῇ. But the fact remains that, while ὁ δεινός occurs in l. 3248, nowhere in the spell is a woman mentioned. There is really no indication that this spell is designed to affect a woman, until this last sentence. [E.N.O.]

1. Parentheses in this spell contain words that are written between the lines. For further discussion see Preisendanz, ad loc.

2. The phrase means “O god (of) all the gods.” Cf. PGM III. 144–45 and n.

3. For the meaning of “twice great,” see PGM IV. 3270 and n.

4. See l. 46 below.

5. This is equivalent to “Thoth . . . He of Ptah.” [R.K.R.]

6. According to Hopfner, OZ I, section 778, this means either as the “E” in l. 27 or the “O” in l. 25.

 crowned, and what goes before the throne?” If he says, “They are crowned with 40 olive branches, and / a censer precedes,” [the] boy speaks the truth.

- Dismissal*: “Go, lord, to your own world and to your own thrones, to your own this way the well-ordered oracle is completed. (But in other copies “when it is full” has been written.)

8. Samas is the Canaanite solar deity Shamash, combined here with the Egyptian counterpart Prē. Cf. ll. 12–14 above.

11. The term ζωγράφος, usually translated “painter,” is here rendered “hieroglyphist,” after the suggestion of Wünsch (see Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.).

12. On the notion of “empty spirit,” see J. Reiling, Hermas and Christian Prophecy, N.T.S 37 (Leiden: Brill, 1973) 41–48.

13. The letters ἦδε εἶδε are indicated in Preisendanz as magical words, but they may be Greek misspelled for ἦδῃ ἦδῃ, “immediately, immediately.”

14. Cf. the expression ὑδωρ ὀχεντικόν in C.H. I. 17. See also Dieterich, Abraxas 25.

Another way*:¹⁶ “In order to catch a thief I summon you, Hermes,¹⁷ immortal god, who cut a furrow down Olympos / and a holy barge, light-bearer Iao, the great immortal, shuddersome indeed to behold and shuddersome to hear. Hand over the thief whom I seek ABERAMENTHŌOULERTHEXENAXSONELYSŌTHNEMAREBA.” / This formula is to be said 2 times during the purificatory sacrifice.

Formula of bread and cheese:¹⁸ “Come to me, LISSOIN MATERNA MAUERTĒ PREPTEKTION INTIKIOUS OLOKOTOUS PERIKLYSAI; / may you bring back to me what is lost and point out the thief today. I call upon Hermes, finder of thieves, Helios and the pupils¹⁹ of Helios, / two who bring to light lawless deeds, and Themis,²⁰ Erinys,²¹ Ammon, and Parammon, to take control of the thief’s throat and to single him out / today, in this hour.”

Preparation: The same formula during the purificatory sacrifice: Take a faïence vessel, add water, myrrh, and calf’s-snout plant. Wet a branch of laurel [and sprinkle], / cleansing each one. Take a tripod and place it on an earthen altar, offer myrrh, frankincense, and a frog’s tongue. Take unsalted winter wheat and goat-/cheese, and give to each 8 drams of winter wheat and 8 drams of cheese while saying the following formula (inscribe this name and glue it underneath the tripod): “Master IAŌ, light-bearer, / hand over the thief whom I see.” If one of them does not swallow what was given to him, he is the thief.

The spell to be said to Helios: “I am Thouth, discoverer and founder of drugs and letters. 25. PHNOYN refers to the primordial abyss; cf. PGM III. 554 and IV. 139. PHNOYN is the Bohairic spelling of the definite article before NOYN used as a vocative. [R.K.R.] See also Bonnet, RÄRG 535–36, s.v. “Nun.”

26. Heron was a god of Greco-Roman Egypt, apparently a fusion of the “Thracian rider god” and the Egyptian god Atum; the name has no connection with the English bird name or the bird so called. [M.S.] See Bonnet, RÄRG 295–96, s.v. “Heron.”

27. For the egg of the ibis, see Bonnet, RÄRG 321, s.v. “Ibis”; 162–64, s.v. “Ei”; Bergman, Isis-Seele und Osiris-Ei 76–87.

28. For this name, see PGM III. 636; V. 353. For possible explanations, see Preisendanz, vol. III, index, p. 219, s.v. “Eμ.”

29. This name is unexplained; for suggestions, see Preisendanz, vol. III, index, p. 259 s.v. “κεφ.” Em may be an abbreviation of Ammon, and Keph of Kynokephalos, i.e., baboon, symbol of Thoth, with whom the magician identified himself at the beginning of the spell. [M.S.]

30. For this threat against the deity see J. Bergman, “Mystische Anklänge in den altägyptischen Vorstellungen von Gott und Welt,” in Mysticism, Scripta Instituti Donneriani Aboensis 5 (1970): 70–72.

31. The translation of the term follows the emendation in Preisendanz; see the apparatus ad loc. Clearly Anubis is meant. See also Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 317–19; idem, The Isis-Book 215–18. The reference is to the dog-headed god Anubis, assistant of Osiris, Isis, and Horus. It is not Thoth because (1) the magician has identified himself with Thoth; (2) this god face is “black,” as Anubis commonly is in Egyptian paintings, whereas the Kynokephalos (“dog-headed,” s.c. baboon) of Thoth is commonly tan. [M.S.]

32. For the name Hesies, see Glossary, s.v. “Esics.”

33. For the myth recounted here, cf. Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 13, 356C–D, and the commentary by Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 312. For the threat to Busiris, cf. P. Smither, “A Ramesside Love-Charm,” JEA 27 (1941): 131–32.

34. The fatherless boy is Horus; the mother, Isis. Cf. PGM III. 543.

35. For toppling the supports in heaven, cf. PGM III. 537–38; IV. 669. The two mountains of east and west (Bakhu and Manu) form the horizons of Egyptian cosmography; they derive from the mountains framing the Nile valley. See Bonnet, RÄRG 78, s.v. “Bachu”; 440, s.v. “Manu.” [R.K.R.]

36. The papyrus has ἀνοίξιν from ἀνοίξις, “opening.” The reference is obscure; it may refer to an unknown mythical or ritual item or it may be a corruption of the text. See the apparatus ad loc.; LSJ, s.v.

*Tr.: Morton Smith. How to carve, consecrate, and use a scarab; with the spell to be said when using it. Though the scarab is engraved with Isis and the spell is addressed to Helios, the ring is said to be “of Hermes” because the spell first identifies the magician with Hermes-Thoth. As Thoth he invokes Osiris (the Nile) from the underworld waters, to reveal to him all facts relevant to all men, and he threatens that, unless he receives this knowledge, he will destroy the remains of Osiris’ body, reveal his mysteries, and generally upset the divine order.

*Tr.: Morton Smith. This untitled text gives directions for a familiar type of magical rite called defixio—essentially sending a letter to underworld powers to ask or compel them to do something to a specified victim. Many defixiones are, like this one, intended to prevent things from happening. The gods invoked here are a curious lot—solar and subterranean, Hebrew, Egyptian, and Mesopotamian, suggesting that the text has grown, like many, by ignorant additions.

40. This refers to the top of the papyrus page, where the scribe has written on the margin, with a few errors, the formula IAEŌBAPHRENEMOYNOTHILARIKRIPIHIAEU and the same letters (without the final U) in reverse order. Together they form a fifty-nine-letter palindrome which often occurs in magical texts, mainly in spells to the solar deities. [M.S.]

41. (On the drawing): the reading of the third line in the circle from TH on, including the letters NIN (?) written above, is uncertain. If PHTHANNI is read, Phrha contains the name of the Egyptian god revered as creator. [M.S.]

62. The doctrine of διοίκησις points to philosophical influence. Cf. also LXX Wisd Sol. 8: 1; Philo, De opif. mundi 3; De spec. leg. IV. 187; C. H. I. 9. See Festugière, La Révélation IV, 190, n. 3.

63. The Greek underlying these magical words corresponds in part to the Jewish blessing, “Blessed be Jahwe, . . . god of Abraham. . . .” It is not clear whether or not the magician understood these words. A similar formula written in Greek occurs on a gold lamella published by R. G. Collingwood and R. P. Wright, The Roman Inscriptions of Britain I (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1965), n. 436. See also Blau, Das altjüdische Zauberberwesen 106–7.

5. "In holy measures" translates ἱεροῖσι πεδίλοις. Although Preisendanz says "auf heiligen Sandalen," this sense has no place in the passage: first, the word order suggests that the phrase goes closely with μοι λισσομένῳ ("to me as I pray"); second, Daphne's mythology seems to have nothing to do with sandals (cf. L. von Sybel, in Roscher I [1884–86] 954–55, s.v. "Daphne," although the article omits this passage and PGM in general); and third, this passage is hymnic, and one meaning of πέδιλον (as the diminutive of πούς) is "meter," "measure," for which cf. Pindar, O. 3.5 and 6. 8. [E.N.O.]

6. The mixing of the plant and the goddess in this hymn is another good example of the thin line between inanimate objects and personified spirits of these objects. Cf. esp. ll. 40–41 below. [E.N.O.]

7. These dactylic hexameters (ll. 22–38), many of which are metrically faulty, are the reconstructed Hymn 10; see Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 244–45. Ll. 24–27 (Hymn 10. 4–6) appear, in slightly altered form, at PGM II. 2–4 (Hymn 9. 1–3). [E.N.O.]

8. The translation is problematic, but cf. perhaps Plutarch, Mor. 131A; Cic. 4, 862F. [E.N.O.]

9. Cf. Homer, Il. 1. 37–38.

10. The voces magicæ in these verses are intended to be a part of the verses. The translation attempts to treat them in the same way, but some liberties must be taken. [E.N.O.]

11. φιλάρματε, "fond of chariots," is the reading in Hymn 10. 12; the papyrus has φιλαίματε, "fond of blood." [E.N.O.]

12. Cf. Homer, Il. 1. 39–41.

13. These dactylic hexameters are also the reconstructed Hymn 14; see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 248. PGM VI. 40 (Hymn 14. 1) also appears at PGM II. 81 (Hymn 11. 1) and VI. 6 (Hymn 13. 1). [E.N.O.]

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. This papyrus is badly mutilated, and little is gained by offering a translation of the scattered words and phrases that remain. Instead, for the three verse passages, the reconstructed texts of Hymns 10, 13, 14 have been used. Additional information appears at VI. 6, 22, and 40. [E.N.O.]

16. See Hymn 14. 4-5 in Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 248.

17. The voces magicae here appear immediately after "in dark night" in the papyrus, but because of the addition of two half-lines in Hymn 14, it is more convenient to complete the translation of the hymn before giving these voces. [E.N.O.]

80. 3-2-2 Such a man is not alive nor will be born, [Od. 6. 201]
81. 3-2-3 Of a truth, child, there's nothing really wrong with this, [Il. 18. 128]
82. 3-2-4 Now is it no longer possible for him to find escape from us, [Il. 22. 219]
83. 3-2-5 we will ransom with bronze and gold, for it is within. [Il. 22. 50]
84. 3-2-6 drink, and do not vie with younger men. [Od. 21. 310]
85. 3-3-1 where are you fleeing, turning your back like a craven in the ranks? [Il. 8. 94]
86. 3-3-2 Would that such a man be called my husband [Od. 6. 244]
87. 3-3-3 plants her head in heaven and walks upon the earth. [Il. 4. 443]
88. 3-3-4 But Zeus does not accomplish for men all their purposes. [Il. 18. 328]
89. 3-3-5 and nodded for his army to survive and not to perish. [Il. 8. 246]
90. 3-3-6 Would that you had not pled with the noble son of Peleus, [Il. 9. 698]
91. 3-4-1 Honey-sweet wine has the best of you, which others also [Od. 21.

- 293]
92. 3-4-2 Act in whatever way your mind is moved, and no longer hold back. [Il. 22. 185]
93. 3-4-3 For it is fated for both to turn the same ground red [Il. 18. 329]
94. 3-4-4 keep on shooting like this, if haply you may become a light to the Danaans [Il. 8. 282]
95. 3-4-5 as there is no one who could keep the dogs off your head, [Il. 22. 348]
96. 3-4-6 You will not kill me, since I am for sure not subject to Fate. [Il. 22. 13]
97. 3-5-1 staying right here you would help me watch over this house [Od. 5. 208]
98. 3-5-2 Get out of the gateway, old man, or it won't be long before you're dragged out by the foot. [Od. 18. 10]
99. 3-5-3 Better for a man to escape evil by flight than to be caught. [Il. 14. 81]
100. 3-5-4 and declare to no one, neither man nor woman, [Od. 13. 308]
101. 3-5-5 of wheat or barley. And the heaps fall thick and fast. [Il. 11. 69]
102. 3-5-6 Whatever sort of word you speak, such would you hear. [Il. 20. 250]
103. 3-6-1 was opposed to giving Helen to tawny Menelaos, [Il. 11. 125]
104. 3-6-2 or will you alter your purpose? The hearts of the good are flexible. [Il. 15. 203]
105. 3-6-3 Yet I for one never doubted, but at heart [Od. 13. 339]
106. 3-6-4 Eurymachos, it will not be so. And even you know it. [Od. 21. 257]
107. 3-6-5 You miserable foreigner, you have no sense at all. [Od. 21. 288]
108. 3-6-6 And the father granted him one thing, but denied him the other. [Il. 16. 250]
109. 4-1-1 Nay, go to your chambers and tend to your own work, [Od. 1. 356]
110. 4-1-2 Now then, do not even tell this to your wife. [Od. 11. 224 (alternate version)]
111. 4-1-3 would you have been stoned to death for all the wrongs you've done. [Il. 3. 57]
112. 4-1-4 you prayed to the immortals to see with a beard grown. [Od. 18. 176]
113. 4-1-5 and vow to Lycian-born Apollo the famous archer [Il. 4. 101]
114. 4-1-6 and no spirit of harmony unites wolves and sheep, [Il. 22. 263]
115. 4-2-1 Come now, let us make these concessions to one another, [Il. 4. 62]
116. 4-2-2 And in the throng were Strife and Uproar, and Fate-of-Death, [Il. 18. 535]
117. 4-2-3 . . .
118. 4-2-4 Up, rush into battle, the man you have always claimed to be. [Il. 4. 264]
119. 4-2-5 . . .
120. 4-2-6 You baby, what use now to keep your bow idle? [Il. 21. 474]
121. 4-3-1 For even fair-tressed Niobe turned her mind to food, [Il. 24. 602]
122. 4-3-2 after giving a mass of bronze and gold and raiment [Od. 5. 38]
123. 4-3-3 Surely then the journey will not be useless or fail to occur. [Od. 2. 273]
124. 4-3-4 One omen is best, to defend your country. [Il. 12. 243]
125. 4-3-5 I will gild her horns all round and sacrifice her to you. [Il. 10. 294]

126. 4-3-6 and you would gain every Trojan's thanks and praise, [Il. 4. 95]
 127. 4-4-1 put in with your ship, since women are no longer trustworthy. [Od. 11. 456]
 128. 4-4-2 It is not possible or proper to deny your request. [Il. 14. 212]
 129. 4-4-3 would straightway fit his will to your desire and mine. [Il. 15. 52]
 130. 4-4-4 and give him instruction. And it will be beneficial for him to obey. [Il. 11. 789]
 131. 4-4-5 will give glory to me, and your soul to horse-famed Hades. [Il. 5. 654]
 132. 4-4-6 fill up his ship with gold and bronze aplenty, [Il. 9. 137]
 133. 4-5-1 but tell one part, and let the other be concealed. [Od. 11. 443]
 134. 4-5-2 and at birth Zeus sends a weight of misery. [Il. 10. 71]
 135. 4-5-3 alone to have intelligence, but they are flitting shades. [Od. 10. 495]
 136. 4-5-4 yielding to his indignation. But they now withheld from him the gifts [Il. 9. 598]
 137. 4-5-5 I rejoice at hearing what you say, son of Laërtes. [Il. 19. 185]
 138. 4-5-6 But Zeus causes men's prowess to wax or to wane, [Il. 20. 242]
 139. 4-6-1 a terrible man. He would be quick to blame even the blameless. [Il. 11. 654]
 140. 4-6-2 with all haste. For now would you capture the broad-wayed city [Il. 2. 66]
 141. 4-6-3 Endure now, my heart. An even greater outrage did you once endure, [Od. 20. 18]
 142. 4-6-4 You lunatic, sit still and listen to the word of others, [Il. 2. 200]
 143. 4-6-5 had cast aside wrath and chosen friendship. [Il. 16. 282]
 144. 4-6-6 so good it is for a son to be left by a dead [Od. 3. 196]
 145. 5-1-1 Here then, spread under your chest a veil, [Od. 5. 346]
 146. 5-1-2 'Tis impiety to exult over men slain. [Od. 22. 412]
 147. 5-1-3 through immortal night, when other mortals sleep? [Il. 24. 363]
 148. 5-1-4 How then could I forget divine Odysseus? [Od. 1. 65]
 149. 5-1-5 lurid death and o'erpowering doom laid hold of [Il. 5. 83]
 150. 5-1-6 So there's nothing else as horrible and vile as a woman [Od. 11. 427]
 151. 5-2-1 Let us not advance to fight the Danaans around the ships. [Il. 12. 216]
 152. 5-2-2 to put up a defense, when some fellow provokes a fight. [Il. 24. 369; Od. 16. 72; 21. 133]
 153. 5-2-3 nor do children at his knees call him "papa" [Il. 5. 408]
 154. 5-2-4 I am this very man, back home now. And after many toils [Od. 21. 207]
 155. 5-2-5 Talk not like this. There'll be no change before [Il. 5. 218]
 156. 5-2-6 let him stay here the while, even though he's eager for Ares. [Il. 19. 189]
 157. 5-3-1 And do not, exulting in war and battle, [Il. 16. 91]
 158. 5-3-2 never to have gone to bed with her and had intercourse, [Il. 9. 133; 19. 176]
 159. 5-3-3 and moistens the lips, but fails to moisten the palate. [Il. 22. 495]
 160. 5-3-4 Take heart! Let these matters not trouble your thoughts. [Il. 18. 463]
 161. 5-3-5 But this mad dog I'm unable to hit. [Il. 8. 299]
 162. 5-3-6 Keep quiet, friend, and do as I say. [Il. 4. 412]

163. 5-4-1 Bad deeds don't prosper. The slow man for sure overtakes the swift, [Od. 8. 329]
164. 5-4-2 They shut fast and locked the doors of the hall. [Od. 21. 236]
165. 5-4-3 Ah, poor man! Death's not at all on your mind, [Il. 17. 201]
166. 5-4-4 Odysseus has come and reached home, though he was long in coming. [Od. 23. 7]
167. 5-4-5 in full he will accomplish it at last, and the penalty they pay is great, [Il. 4. 161]
168. 5-4-6 and therein was Strife, and therein Valor, and therein chilling Attack, [Il. 5. 740]
169. 5-5-1 but 'tis most wretched to die and meet one's doom by starvation. [Od. 12. 342]
170. 5-5-2 shall I be laid low when I die. But good repute is now my goal, [Il. 18. 121]
171. 5-5-3 Up, rush into battle, the man you have always claimed to be. [Il. 4. 264]
172. 5-5-4 In no way do I mock you, dear child, nor am I playing tricks. [Od. 23. 26]
173. 5-5-5 but she stayed Alkmene's labor and stopped her from giving birth. [Il. 19. 119]
174. 5-5-6 But come, and hereafter I shall make amends for this, if now anything wrong [Il. 4. 362]
175. 5-6-1 Where are you two rushing? What causes the heart within your breast to rage? [Il. 8. 413]
176. 5-6-2 Pray now, let him not be too much on your mind. [Od. 13. 421]
177. 5-6-3 But the gods do not, I ween, give men all things at the same time. [Il. 4. 320]
178. 5-6-4 Talk not like this. There'll be no change before [Il. 5. 218]
179. 5-6-5 So he spake, but did not move the mind of Zeus by saying this. [Il. 12. 173]
180. 5-6-6 but Odysseus nodded no and checked him in his eagerness. [Od. 21. 129]
181. 6-1-1 How can you want to go alone to the ships of the Achaians? [Il. 24. 203]
182. 6-1-2 him a bridegroom in his house, who left as only child a daughter [Od. 7. 65]
183. 6-1-3 And too, I've taken the mist from your eyes, which before was there, [Il. 5. 127]
184. 6-1-4 we may try the bow and complete the contest. [Od. 21. 180]
185. 6-1-5 And I know that my arrival was longed for by you two [Od. 21. 209]
186. 6-1-6 I shall dress him in a mantle and a tunic, fine garments. [Od. 16. 79; 17. 550; 21. 339]
187. 6-2-1 by fastening a noose sheer from a high rafter, [Od. 11. 278]
188. 6-2-2 remembering our excellence, of the sort that even we [Od. 8. 244]
189. 6-2-3 the sea's great expanse they cross, since this is the Earthshaker's gift to them. [Od. 7. 35]
190. 6-2-4 Nay, come on with the bow. You'll soon be sorry for obeying everybody. [Od. 21. 369]
191. 6-2-5 But hurry into battle, and rouse the other soldiers. [Il. 19. 139]

192. 6-2-6 For mighty Herakles, not even he escaped his doom, [Il. 18. 117]
 193. 6-3-1 amends I wish to make and to give a boundless ransom. [Il. 9. 120;
 19. 138]
 194. 6-3-2 And let him stand up among the Argives and swear an oath to you
 [Il. 19. 175]
 195. 6-3-3 The man is nearby. Our search will not be long, if you are willing [Il.
 14. 110]
 196. 6-3-4 and not quite suddenly, and a very god should be the cause? [Od.
 21. 196]
 197. 6-3-5 Verily, these things have already happened, and not otherwise could [Il. 14. 53]
 198. 6-3-6 On now, follow close! In action numbers make a difference. [Il. 12.
 412]
 199. 6-4-1 surely then the gods themselves have ruined your mind. [Il. 7. 360;
 12. 234]
 200. 6-4-2 Take heart, and let your thoughts not be of death. [Il. 10. 383]
 201. 6-4-3 by her wailing she rouse from sleep her household servants, [Il. 5.
 413]
 202. 6-4-4 Come now in strict silence, and I shall lead the way, [Od. 7. 30]
 203. 6-4-5 are there ears for hearing, and sense and respect are dead. [Il. 15.
 129]
 204. 6-4-6 as he was growing old. But the son did not grow old in his father's armor. [Il. 17. 197]
 205. 6-5-1 to return home and behold the day of homecoming. [Od. 5. 220;
 8. 466]
 206. 6-5-2 Apollo of the silver bow did strike the one, still sonless, [Od. 7. 64]
 207. 6-5-3 then you may hope to see your loved ones and reach [Od. 7. 76]
 208. 6-5-4 As for you two, I will tell you exactly how it will be. [Od. 21. 212]
 209. 6-5-5 For so shall I proclaim, and it will be accomplished too. [Il. 1. 212]
 210. 6-5-6 and I shall send him wherever his heart and spirit urge him. [Od. 16.
 81; 21. 342]
 211. 6-6-1 idiot? You'll soon pay when the swift hounds devour you [Od. 21.
 363]
 212. 6-6-2 You would learn what mighty hands I have to back me up. [Od. 20.
 237; 21. 202]
 213. 6-6-3 In no wise do I think he will in that event take you for himself, nor is it proper. [Od. 21. 322]
 214. 6-6-4 here we gather, waiting day after day. [Od. 21. 156]
 215. 6-6-5 to reach decision making secret plans. Nor yet now to me [Il. 1.
 542]
 216. 6-6-6 Don't dare get it into your mind to escape from me, Dolon. [Il. 10.

Here end the verses of the Homer oracle. May it help you!

*Tr.: Hubert Martin, Jr. The so-called Homer oracle, a list of 216 isolated and disconnected Homeric verses, is in fact a manual designed to provide the reader with an oracular response to a personal inquiry. Concerned with matters of daily life such as we find in our newspaper horoscopes, the inquirer rolls three dice or knucklebones, each of which has its six surfaces numbered from one to six and is used to select a number from one of the three vertical number columns to the left of the Homeric verses (in each column, there are only six numbers to select from, though each occurs thirty-six times); one die thrown three times would achieve the same purpose. The three numbers selected by this process establish a horizontal number column that indicates which verse is to be consulted; e.g., a roll of 1, 3, 6 on the dice would guide the inquirer to no. 18. As is true with oracles in general, most of the responses provide ambiguous answers which leave the exact interpretation up to the reader.

In this translation of Homer, which usually follows the Oxford Classical Text rather than that of Preisendanz, a lowercase letter at the beginning of a translated verse indicates that the first word of the verse does not begin a sentence. Such verses often constitute or involve incomplete syntactical units. In general, the punctuation at the end of a translated verse is that of the Oxford text, although in some instances this policy cannot be strictly observed. In a number of cases both the text and the Homeric reference given by Preisendanz have been emended. Furthermore, each of the verses has been numbered consecutively for ready reference. Since in all but a few instances the text of the Homeric verse is certain, we have omitted the usual brackets used to indicate lacunae in the papyrus. For additional discussion on this special type of divination, see T. Hopfner, "Astragalomanteia," PRE.S 4 (1924) 51–56, esp. 54–55; cf. Franz Heinverter, Würfel- und Buchstabenorakel in Griechenland und Kleinasien (Breslau, 1912).

Demokritos' "table gimmicks":

To make bronzeware look like it's made of gold:¹ Mix native sulfur with chalky soil and wipe it off.²

/ To make an egg become like an apple: Boil the egg and smear it with a mixture of egg-yolk and [red] wine.³ 170

To make the chef unable to light the burner: Set a houseleek plant on his stove.

1. According to H. Diels and W. Kranz, Die Fragmente der Vorsokratiker (Berlin: Weidmann, ⁸1956), vol. II, p. 220, this recipe shows the beginnings of alchemy.

2. That is, one wipes off the mixture after it has been applied.

3. For coloring eggs, see the references in M. Wellmann, Die ΦΥΣΙΚΑ des Bolos Demokritos und der Magier Anaxilaos aus Larissa, part I, APAW 7 (1928): 57–58. Cf. also Athenaeus 13. 484e. Here, "egg yolk" can also mean "saffron."

*To be able to eat garlic and not stink:*⁴ Bake beetroots and eat them.

To keep an old woman from either chattering or drinking too much: Mince some pine⁵ / and put it in her mixed wine.

*To make the gladiators painted [on the cups] “fight”:*⁶ Smoke some “hare’s-head” underneath them.

To make cold food burn the banqueter: Soak a squill in hot water and give it to him to wash with. To relieve him: [Apply] oil.

To let those who have difficulty intermingling⁷ perform well: Give gum mixed with wine and honey / to be smeared on the face.

*To be able to drink a lot and not get drunk:*⁸ Eat a baked pig’s lung.

*To be able to travel [a long way] home and not get thirsty:*⁹ Gulp down an egg beaten in wine.

*To be able to copulate a lot:*¹⁰ Grind up fifty tiny pinecones with 2 ozs. of sweet wine and two pepper grains and drink it.

*To get an erection*¹¹ / when you want: Grind up a pepper with some honey and coat your “thing.”

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky. This curious collection of recipes contains humorous tricks as well as helpful remedies presumably designed to be performed or used at a symposiastic dinner. Similar tricks are found scattered throughout the pages of Athenaeus’ Deipnosophistae. See also PGM XIb; VII. 149–54; Delatte, Anecdota Atheniensia 449 (3–7); Wellmann, APAW.PH 7 (1928): 1–80. It has not been fully appreciated that this collection seems to refer to events that take place at a dinner table. This fact does not necessarily hold true for all the other examples of paignia.

PGM VII. 186–90

Favor and victory charm:* Take a blood-eating gecko that has been found among the tombs and grasp its right front foot and cut it off with a reed, allowing the gecko to return to its own hole alive. Fasten the foot / of the creature to the fold of your garment and wear it.

*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM VII. 191–92

Eternal spell for binding a lover:* Rub together some gall of a wild boar, some rock salt, some Attic honey and smear the head of your penis.

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil.

PGM VII. 193–96

For scorpion sting:* On a clean piece of papyrus, write the characters and place it on the part which has the sting; wrap / the papyrus around it, and the sting will lose its pain immediately.

4. Cf. Athenaeus 3. 84c for a similar breath freshener.

5. Cf. Athenaeus 2. 57b–d for pine and pine kernels at a dinner.

6. It seems likely that the reference is to translucent, painted glass which, when lit, produces the effect.

7. The reference is presumably to those who are shy in a social setting: the concoction is to be applied to the face.

8. Cf. Athenaeus 2. 52d where eating almonds is said to prevent drunkenness.

9. In Athenaeus 2. 58f and 2.69f similar means for quenching thirst are found.

10. Cf. Athenaeus 1. 18d–e, where certain devices for having frequent sexual intercourse are mentioned.

Take a black¹⁶ of Isis and put it around your hand. When you are almost awake the god will come and speak to you, and he will not go away unless you wipe off / your hand with spikenard or something of roses and smear the picture with the black of

12. The use of "stele" may refer here to the triangular shape found on the drawing of the tin plate.

13. The translation follows the text of Preisendanz, μίλτον (καὶ αἷμα) περιστερᾶς λευκῆς. The conjectural (καὶ αἷμα) makes the text conform to the parallel passage in PGM VIII. 69–70, where blood of a white dove is mentioned. The addition here, however, is not needed, for μίλτον (which does not occur in the parallel passage) can also mean "blood." See PGM XII. 98 and LSJ, s.v. "μίλτον," III.

14. The Greek seems defective here. The only possible antecedent for αὐτός is the preceding portion as a substance with which one is to write. The following reference to ink suggests that it would be better to take αὐτός as the substance on which one is to write, particularly since the practitioner has just been told to put the portion aside, and no substance to write on is mentioned. In the parallel charm, PGM VIII. 64–110, a similar potion is used to paint the left hand.

15. Cf. PGM VIII. 84–111, where the use of a lamp is more fully described; this description occurs immediately before the prayer to the headless god, which is here found in ll. 233–48.

16. This item, which is not explained here (cf. PGM VII. 231; VIII. 67–68), may be the black linen garment used in the Isis cult. It is mentioned in Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 39, 366E; 77, 382C. See Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 451, 562. Preisendanz interprets the reference by translating: "take a black piece from the garment. . . ."

Isis.¹⁷ But the strip of cloth put around your neck,¹⁸ so that he will not smite you.

Formula to be spoken to the lamp: “I call upon you, the headless god, the one who has his face upon his feet;¹⁹ you are the one who hurls lightning, / who thunders, you are [the one whose] mouth continually pours on himself. You are the one who is over Necessity ARBATHIAO; you are the one lying on a coffin and having at the side of the head an elbow cushion²⁰ of resin and asphalt, the one whom they call ANOUTH. Rise up, daimon. You are not a daimon, but the [blood] of the 2 falcons²¹ / who chatter and watch before the head of Heaven.²² Rouse your nighttime form, in which you proclaim all things publicly. I conjure you, daimon, by your two names ANOUTH ANOUTH. You are the headless god, the one who has a head and his face on his feet, / dim-sighted Besas. We are not ignorant. You are the one whose mouth [continually] burns. I conjure [you by] your two names ANOUTH ANOUTH M . . . ORA PHĒSARA Ê . . . Come, lord, reveal to me concerning the NN matter, without deceit, without treachery, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly.” The small figure²³ is drawn in the beginning of the book.

PGM VII. 250–54

Request for a dream oracle, a request which is always used. Formula to be spoken to the day lamp: “NAIENCHRĒ NAIENCHRĒ, mother of fire and water, you are the one who rises before, ARCHENTECHTHA; reveal to me concerning the NN matter. If yes, show me a plant and water, but if no, fire and iron; immediately, [immediately; quickly,] quickly.”

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 255–59

Another to the same lamp: “Hail, lord, lamp, you who shine beside Osiris and shine beside Osirhentechtha²⁴ and my lord, the archangel Michael. If it is advantageous for me to do this, show me a plant and water, but if not, fire and iron, immediately, immediately.”

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

17. See the note on l. 227 above. There is no previous reference in this charm to a picture (though “write” in l. 226 can also mean “draw”). Cf., however, PGM VIII. 64–65.

18. For this detail, see PGM VIII. 67.

19. K. Preisendanz, Akephalos. Der kopflose Gott, Beihefte zum Alten Orient 8 (Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1926) 48–50, sees this passage as a reference to the Egyptian practice of putting the heads of those who have been beheaded between their feet. A. Delatte, “Akephalos,” BCH 38 (1914): 221–32, prefers to see this passage as a reference to the god Besas, who has the heads of animals for feet. Cf. K. Abel, “Akephalos,” PRE.S 12 (1970): 13. See Glossary, s.v. “Headless.”

20. Cf. on this point PGM VIII. 97–98.

21. This refers to Isis and Nephthys, who in the form of falcons or kites watch over the body of Osiris. See Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 35, 305, 328. [R.K.R.]

22. See on this concept the parallel passage PGM VIII. 100–101, which has ‘Oσιρεως, “of Osiris,” instead of “of Heaven.” But “Heaven” should be kept (against the suggestion by F. Boll, in Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.). Perhaps, Nut (Heaven) is really meant here: her image was placed in the coffin in such a way that her head and that of the dead were close to each other. [J.B.]

23. The picture is missing; it may have been in the portion of the papyrus which is now lost.

24. See PGM III. 171 and note; note also the apparatus at PGM VII. 252.

25. Cf. on this point Soranus, Gynecology III. 50 (ed. Ilberg, pp. 127–28): “On the Flexion, Bending, and Ascent of the Uterus,” esp. sec. 2 (p. 127): “[A] flexing to the anterior of the uterus causes some problems [blockage?] in urination, and also causes a swelling of the pubic area; in some patients, it [will cause] an inability to stand upright.” [J.S.] For a more magical interpretation see A. A. Barb, “Diva Matrix,” JWCI 16 (1953): 193–238.

26. The context might suggest “hips,” but the Greek is specific; perhaps the author was quite vague in the knowledge of internal anatomy. [J.S.]

27. Presumably, this means that the cord around the neck is to be woven together from the threads of seven colors. The strip of tin would then be worn as an amulet.

28. Or “horoscope”; see, however, PGM III. 275, where κύκλος appears alone. On Selene and her astrological role in magic, see Hopfner, OZ I, secs. 826–28; Delatte, Anecdota Atheniensia I, 411. On κύκλος, see Gundel, Astrologumena, esp. pls. I, VII. [E.N.O.]

PGM VII. 319–34

- 320 Charm for direct vision: Take a copper vessel, / pour rainwater into it and make an offering of male frankincense.

Formula: “Let the earth be still, let the air be still, let the sea be still; let the winds also be still, and do not be a hindrance to this my divination—no sound, no loud cry, no hissing. For I am a prophet, and since I am about to call / a terrible, fearful name, ‘KOLLA OLPHIOGEMALA ACHERÖIO,’ open [the holy temple,] the world [built on the earth,] and welcome Osiris, because I am MANCHNÖBIS CHOL-CHOBĒ MALASĒT IAT THANNOUTTA KERTÖMENOU PAKERBAÖ KRAMMASIRAT MOMOMO MELASOUT PEU PHRĒ. Come on, come on; immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly; and speak concerning those things about which I questioned you. Appear to me, lord Anubis,⁴² I command you, for I am IEÖ BELPHENÖ, who considers [this] matter.”

Dismissal. Say: “Go away, Anubis, to your own thrones, for my health and well-being.”

Use after you have kept yourself pure for 3 days.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 335–47

- 335 Charm for a direct vision: If you want to see him yourself, take a fly and Coptic eyepaint, grind them, and smear them on your eyes. Take a feather of an ibis 14 fingers long, smear it with perfume of roses or lilies, wind around it a linen cloth, and hold it with your hands as a scroll. Then say thus, while looking to the side 340 with the left / eye:

Formula: “MOUN EIPOSIS EÜ PHTHA NOUTHİ⁴³ THİE SĒMI NOUEI NĒITHİ⁴⁴ CHRECHREÖ SININÖRPS MOUCH ORÖOU ENTHERINI⁴⁵ EÖĒ MOUNIACH NESÖI MOUNESÖCH MOUNĒI ENIME CHREMOU RENENE SON SNĒI ÖS MOUCHORÖOU ENTHERINI / ANOK SÖS ERMAICHÖ ENTEUMOUTOICHNĒ CHREMOU TĒŠBAS PNĒTE⁴⁶ KYPHOCH EMM IEBOCHNĒS TCHĒNĒ PHIMOU CHNOU NYOICHÖÖIM SEOUNEUMOI INONRI.”

39. The word is Egyptian and means “O/the god.” [R.K.R.]

40. Preisendanz adds this formula from I. 310.

41. Read νεβουτοσουαληθ (tau for gamma). See PGM IV. 2484–85, and Glossary, s.v. “Nebuto-soualeth.”

42. For Anubis as conducting the gods to the magician, cf. PDM xiv. 35–37. [R.K.R.]

43. These three words mean in Egyptian, “Come, Ptah, god.” [R.K.R.]

44. This name seems to refer to the Egyptian goddess Neith; see Bonnet RÄRG 512–17, s.v. “Neith.” [R.K.R.] Cf. Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 9, 354C, reporting about the statue of the Athena of Sais, as Neith is called by the Greeks. See Griffiths, Plutarch’s De Iside et Osiride 283–84.

45. This word corresponds to the Egyptian ntr, “god.” [R.K.R.]

46. Perhaps this corresponds to the Egyptian p3 ntr, “O/the god.” Cf. PGM VII. 316. [R.K.R.]

PGM VII. 348–58

Divination by means of a boy: ⁴⁷ After you have laid [him] on the ground, speak, and a dark-colored boy will appear to him. /

Formula: “I call upon you, inhabitants of Chaos and Erebos, of the depth, of earth, watchers of heaven, of darkness, masters of things not to be seen, guardians of secrets, leaders of those beneath the earth, administrators of things which are infinite, those who wield power over earth, servants in the chasm, shudderful fighters, fearful ministers, inhabitants of dark Erebos, / coercive watchers, rulers of cliffs, grievors of the heart, adverse daimons, iron-hearted ones BITHOURARĀ ASOUĒMARĀ . . . OTROUR MOURROUR APHLAU MANDRAROUROU SOU MARAROU, reveal concerning the matter which I am considering” (add the usual). 350

Request for a dream oracle: Take a strip of clean linen and write on it the following name. / Roll it up to make a wick, pour pure olive oil over it and light it. 360

The formula to be written is this: “HARMIOUTH LAILAM CHŌOUCH ⁴⁸ ARSE-NOPHRĒ PHRĒU PHTHA HARCHENTECHTHA.”

In the evening then, when you are about to go to sleep, being pure in every respect, do this: Go to the lamp, say 7 times the following formula, extinguish the light / and go to sleep. 365

The formula to be spoken is as follows: “SACHMOUNE ⁴⁹ PAĒMALIGOTĒRĒENCH, the one who shakes, who thunders, who has swallowed the serpent, surrounds the moon, and hour by hour raises the disk of the sun, ‘CHTHETHŌNI’ is your name. I ask you, lords of the gods, SĒTH CHRĒPS: reveal to me concerning the things I wish.”

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 370–73

Against every wild animal, aquatic creature and robbers: Attach a tassel ⁵⁰ to your garment and say: “LŌMA ZATH AIŌN ACHTHASE MA . . . ZAL BALAMAŌN ĒIEOY, protect me, NN, in the present hour; immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly.” 370

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 374–76

Charm to induce insomnia: [Take] a seashell and write: / “IPSAĒ IAŌAI, let her, NN daughter of NN, lie awake because of me.” That night she will lie awake. 375

*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM VII. 376–84

Another: Take a lamp and furnish it with a wick and say to it: “I conjure you, lamp, by your mother Hestia, MĒRALLĒL (say twice), and by your father Hephaios, MELIBOU MELIBAU / MELIBAUBAU. [Let] her lie awake” (and add the usual). 380

47. On this form of divination, see PGM V. 1 and n.

48. CHŌOUCH is Egyptian for “darkness.” [R.K.R.]

49. This name refers to the goddess Sakhmet; cf. PGM VII. 300. See Bonnet, RĀRG 643–46, s.v. “Sachmet” (esp. 645–46 on her role in magic).

50. For the tassel, cf. the zizith in Jewish religion. See Nm 15:38–39; Dt 22:12. See Schürer, The History of the Jewish People II, 479, with further references.

PGM VII. 411–16

Spell for causing talk while asleep: Take the heart of a hoopoe⁵⁵ and place it in myrrh. And write on a strip of hieratic papyrus the names and characters and roll up the heart in the strip of papyrus and place it upon her pudenda and ask your questions. And she will confess every/thing to you: “DARYGKO IAU IAU 415 ⊗⊗χϕβ ΑΘΑΘΛΔΔΒΒΖΑΤΙΖ β” (add the usual, as much as you want).

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil.

PGM VII. 417–22

A restraining [spell]: Write on a tin lamella with a bronze stylus before sunrise the names “CHRÊMILLON MOULUCH KAMPY CHRÊ ÔPHTHÔ MASKELLI (formula) ERÊKISIPHTHÊ LABEZBYTH.” / Then throw it into [the] river [or] into [the] sea 420 before sunrise. Also write on it, with [the others], these characters: “⊗ΞΖΗΧΕ. Mighty gods, restrain” (add the usual, whatever you wish).

*Tr.: Morton Smith.

PGM VII. 423–28

To win at dice: “THERTHENITHÔR DYAGÔTHERE THERTHENITHÔR SYAPOTHE-REUO KÔDOCHÔR make me a winner at dice, / O prevailing Adriel.” Into your 425 hand say: “Let not even one person be equal to me, for I am THERTHENITHÔR ERÔTHORTHIN DOLOTHOR, and I am going to throw what I want.” And say this repeatedly, and then throw.

Another way you must say the formula is: “Let not even one of these playing with me be equal, and I am going to throw what I want.”

*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM VII. 429–58

A restraining [rite] for anything, works even on chariots. It also causes enmity / and sickness, cuts down, destroys, and overturns, for [whatever] you wish. 430
The spell [in it], when said, conjures daimons [out] and makes them enter [objects or people]. Engrave in a plate [made] of lead from a cold-water channel what you want to happen, and when you have consecrated it with bitter aromatics such as myrrh, bdellium, styrax, and aloes and thyme, / with river mud, late in the evening 435 or in the middle of the night, where there is a stream or the drain of a bath, having tied a cord [to the plate] throw it into the stream—or into the sea—[and let it] be carried along. Use the cord so that, when you wish, you can undo [the spell]. Then should you wish to break [the spell], untie the plate. Say the formula 7 times and you will see something wonderful. Then go away without turning back / or giving 440 an answer to anyone, and when you have washed and immersed yourself, go up to your own [room] and rest, and use [only] vegetable food. Write [the spell] with a headless bronze needle.

The text to be written is: “I conjure you, lord Osiris, by your holy names OUCHIÔCH OUSENARATH, Osiris, OUSERRANNOUPHTHI OSORNOUPHÊ⁵⁶ /

78. For the magical name ORKORĒTHARA, see Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 203.

79. Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 203, n. 34, suggests that the name ZARACHTHŌ may be related to that of Zoroachthor Melchisedek, which plays a role in gnosticism (Pistis Sophia IV. 136, 139, 140; Book of Jeu 108, 110, 111; Epiphanius, Pan. 55. 1; Hippolytus, Ref. 7. 36).

80. This name is written in Coptic.

81. The term “mixture” plays a great role in hellenistic philosophy and gnosticism. See C.H. XI. 7; Pistis Sophia III. 3 (and passim). For further references see PGL, s.v.

82. That is, the planets.

83. For the background of this passage in Egyptian religion and explanation of the names SKIATHI and MANTHŌ, see J. Bergman, “An Ancient Egyptian Theogony in a Greek Magical Papyrus (PGM VII, 11. 516–521),” in Studies in Egyptian Religion Dedicated to Professor Jan Zandee, Numen Supplements 43 (Leiden: Brill, 1982) 28–37.

84. This acclamation expresses Khepri theology, of which the cosmogony in Papyrus Bremner-Rhind 26, 21 (in Pritchard, ANET, p. 6) is the largest example. Khepri, the holy scarab, is mentioned at the end of the climax of names and epithets which often refer to his form of existence even by the Greek terms. The cultic context is also evident: the noble birth, representing creation, takes place in the temple at the time of the appearance of the Original Sea. This sea is identical with the sacred lake in the temple near the two pedestals of the evening bark (Sektat) and the morning bark (Manedjet). The temple represents the whole world, so that the four basements of the earth were shaken by the birth of Khepri, the master of all. [J.B.]

85. That is, eggs from which male chicks will be hatched. The ancients believed that one could predict the sex of the chick from the shape of the egg, though there appears to be some uncertainty as to which shape produced which sex. See Aristotle, Historia Animalium VI. 2 (559a); Pliny NH 10. 74; Columella, De Re Rustica VIII. 5. Cf. the comments by P. Louis in vol. 2 (Paris: Les belles lettres, 1968) of his Budé translation of Aristotle’s treatise, p. 64, n. 4, and by A. L. Peck in vol. 2 (Cambridge, Mass. and London: Harvard University Press, 1970) of his LCL translation of the same treatise, p. 225, n. a; also the reference at PGM XII. 100 to an egg that will produce a male chick. [H.M.]

Lamp divination: Put an iron lampstand in a clean house⁸⁹ at the eastern part, 540 and having placed on it a lamp not colored red, light it. Let the lampwick be of new linen, and light the censer. Then make a burnt offering of frankincense on grapevine wood. The boy, then, should be uncorrupt, pure.⁹⁰

/ Formula: “PHISIO IAŌ AGEANOUMA SKABARŌ SKASABRŌSOU ASABRŌ, because 545

87. Perhaps PAPIE is related to PIFI, but cf. the apparatus ad loc. See for PIFI PGM IV. 595 and n.

88. For the plant called κατανάγκης ἄλευρα, see Diosc. 4.131; Pliny, HN 27.57.

89. The Greek is ambiguous, referring either to a house or a room in a house serving as a temple.

90. On the boy medium, see PGM V. 1 and n.

91. MANE is perhaps equivalent to Egyptian mry.n, “beloved one of,” hence: “beloved one of Osiris, beloved one of Isis.” [J.B.]

92. OUSERI . . . ISI, referring to Osiris and Isis, perhaps by the vocative. [R.K.R.]

93. The epithet “thrice great” results from the Egyptian superlative which repeats the positive three times. For the name Hermes Trismegistos and its derivation, see Festugière, La révélation I, 73–74; K. W. Tröger, “Die hermetische Gnosis,” in Gnosis und Neues Testament. Studien aus Religionswissenschaft und Theologie (Berlin: Evangelische Verlagsanstalt, 1973) 103–4; J. Parlebas, “L’Origine égyptienne de l’appellation ‘Hermès Trismegistos,’” GM 13 (1974): 25–28; M.-Th. and P. Derchain, “Noch einmal Hermes Trismegistos,” GM 15 (1975): 7–10; R. K. Ritner, “Hermes Pentamegistos,” GM 49 (1981): 73–75; idem, “Additional Notes to Hermes Pentamegistos,” GM 50 (1981): 67–68.

94. In Egyptian cosmogony the mythical primordial egg played a great role. Cf. PGM III. 145 and n. According to Orphic cosmogony, the one born from the egg is the god Phanes. See Orph. Frag. nos. 54, 55, and 56, and H. Leisegang, “The Mystery of the Serpent,” in J. Campbell, ed., The Mysteries (Princeton: Princeton University, 1978) 194–260.

95. Or, ἐν τῷ, “. . . by the one who is in TAPSATI . . .,” following Preisendanz. The latter probably belongs to the series of voes magicæ as indicated here. See also I. 576.

96. On SERPHOUTH MOUISRO, see PGM III. 659; and Preisendanz, vol. III, p. 230, s.v.

97. The text is mutilated here: “[and having appeared]” is Preisendanz’s conjecture. The plural participle may refer to the two preceding commands, if these commands refer to two separate gods. But the conjecture does not help much. The problem is also complicated by λέγε, “tell” or “speak” (?).

98. This name probably refers to the god Shu, Greek Sōsis. See Griffiths, Plutarch’s De Iside et Osiride 326–37; Bonnet, RARG 685–89, s.v. “Schu.” Cf. PGM VII. 345.

99. The name is unexplained; for possible explanations, see Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc., and vol. III, p. 217, index, s.v. “Aφ.” Perhaps the name refers to Apophis, the snake god and enemy of Re. This god is mentioned as Ἀποφίς in PGM XIII. 262; cf. Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 36, 365D. See Griffiths,

*“Come to me, ear of heaven; come to me, ear [of the air;] come to me, ear of the earth,” and so forth, as indicated.

PGM VII. 593–619

Fetchng charm for an unmanageable [woman]:¹⁰⁵ Take a [lamp], not painted red, with seven wicks, and make a wick of [the hawser of] a wrecked / ship. On the [1st] wick write with myrrh, “IAÖ”; on the 2nd, “ADÖNAI”; on the 3rd, “SABAÖTH”; on the 4th, “PAGOURĒ”; on the 5th, “MARMOROUTH”; on the 6th, “IAEÖ”; on the 7th, “MICHAËL.” 595

Put olive oil in the lamp and place it in a window / facing south. Also put worm-wood seeds on the lamp (around the edge of the lamp), and recite this formula: “I call upon you, the masters, great gods, who shine in the present hour, on this day, for the sake of her, the ungodly NN. For she has said: / 600

‘IAÖ does not have ribs.’ 605

[She, NN, has said,] ‘ADÖNAI was cast out because of his violent anger.’

[She, NN, has said,] ‘SABAÖTH emitted three cries.’¹⁰⁶

She, NN, has said, ‘PAGOURĒ is by nature a hermaphrodite.’

She, NN, has said, ‘MARMOROUTH was castrated.’

She, NN, has said, ‘IAEÖ was not entrusted with the ark.’

She, NN, has said, ‘MICHAËL is by nature a hermaphrodite.’

/ “I am not the one who says such things, master, but she, the godless NN. Therefore fetch her for me, her inflamed with passion, submissive. Let her not find sleep until she comes to me” (repeat 7 times). 610

If the first lamp flickers, know that she has been seized by the daimon. And if the 2nd, she has left (the house); and if the 3rd, she is on the / way; and if the 4th, she has arrived; and if the 5th, she is at the door; the 6th, at the doorlatch; the 7th, she has come into the house. 615

It can fetch people even from across the sea. For that, place the lamp in some water in the open air. Place a papyrus boat under the lamp, and [recite the] formula 6 times.

PGM VII. 619–27

From the Diadem of Moses:¹⁰⁷ / Take the plant snapdragon and hold it under your tongue while lying asleep. And rise early and before you speak to anyone recite the names, and you will be invisible to everyone. 620

But when you say them over drinking cups and give them to a woman, she will love you, since this spell has power over everything: “ARESKILLIOUS THOU DALESAI KRAMMASI CHAMMAR / MOULABÖTH LAUABAR CHOUPHAR PHOR PHÖRBAÖ SACHI HARBACH MACHIMASÖ IAÖ SABAÖTH ADÖNAI.” 625

For what you wish, say: “Get her, NN, for me, NN” (add the usual, whatever you wish).

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil.

105. See for parallels to this spell PGM IV. 2475 and n.

106. For this cry, cf. the parallel in Ignatius, Eph. 19. 1.

107. This spell seems to be a selection from a larger collection entitled “The Diadem of Moses.” [E.N.O.]

PGM VII. 628–42

- *Taking a field lizard,¹⁰⁸ let it down into oil of lilies until it be deified. Then engrave / the [image of] the Asklepios [worshiped] in Memphis¹⁰⁹ on a ring of iron from a leg fetter and put [the ring] into [the] oil of lilies [in which the lizard was drowned]. And when you use [the ring] take [it and] show [it] to the pole star,¹¹⁰ saying this spell 7 times: “MENŌPHRI¹¹¹ who sit on the cherubim, send me / the true Asklepios, not some deceitful daimon instead of the god.” Then take the incense burner in where you are going to sleep and burn 3 grains of frankincense and wave the ring in the smoke of the incense, saying 7 times the [spell], “CHAU-APS / ŌAELAPS ŌAIS LYSIPHTHA,¹¹² lord Asklepios, appear.” And wear the ring on the index finger of your right hand.

*Tr.: Morton Smith.

PGM VII. 643–51

- Cup spell, quite remarkable: Say the spell that is spoken to the cup 7 times: “You are wine; you are not wine¹¹³ but the head of Athena. / You are wine; you are not wine, but the guts of Osiris, the guts of IAŌ PAKERBĒTH SEMESILAM ŌŌŌ Ē PATACHNA IAAA.” (For the spell of compulsion: “ABLANATHANALBA AKRAMMACHAMAREI EEE, who has been stationed over necessity, IAKOUB IA IAŌ SABAŌTH ADŌNAI ABRASAX”).

- 650 “At whatever hour / you descend into the guts of her, NN, let her love me, NN, [for] all the time of her life.”

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil.

PGM VII. 652–60

- Spell to induce insomnia by means of a bat: Take blood of a black ox or of a goat or of Typhon¹¹⁴—but preferably of a goat—and write on its right wing: “BŌRPHŌR PHORBA PHORPHARBA / PHŌRBŌRPHORBA PHORBA PHORBA PHORBA BAPHAIĒ PHŌRBAPHŌR BARBA” (put one word under another one, like bricks,¹¹⁵ and [add the usual, whatever] you want). And on the left wing write this in the same pattern: “PHŌRPHŌR PHORBA BORPHOR PHORBA BORPHOR PHORBA PHORPHOR PHORBABŌR / BORBORBA PHŌRPHŌR PHORBA” (likewise, add the usual as you want).

*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

108. See A. D. Nock, “The Lizard in Magic and Religion,” in his Essays I, 271–76. On deification by drowning, see PGM I. 5; III. 1, with notes; LXI. 39–71.

109. Asklepios in Memphis is the Egyptian god Imhotep. See D. Wildung, Imhotep und Amenhotep (München: Deutscher Kunstverlag, 1977). [R.K.R.]

110. The constellation of the pole star (Bear) is connected here with the “true” Asklepios of Memphis, that is Asklepios/Imhotep in contrast to the Greek Asklepios. This expression is indeed non-Greek. See Hopfner, OZ II, secs. 14 and 181.

111. That is, Memphis, or perhaps Memphite. [R.K.R.]

112. -SI PHTHA is Egyptian and means “son of Ptah,” a standard epithet of Imhotep. [R.K.R.]

113. For the formula “you are x, you are not x, but . . .” cf., e.g., PGM LXI. 7–9. See also Smith, Jesus the Magician 111, 197 n.

114. The “blood of Typhon” is the blood of an ass. See PGM IV. 2100 and n.

115. For this magical formation of words, see PGM V. 349, 361 and Preisendanz, vol. I, plate III, no. 6.

PGM VII. 661–63

Love spell: In conversation ¹¹⁶ while kissing passionately, say: “ANOK THARENEPI-BATHA CHEOUCHCHA ANOA ANOK CHARIEMOCHTH LAILAM.”

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil.

PGM VII. 664–85

Spell for obtaining dream revelations: Take a linen strip, and on it you write with myrrh ink the matter, / and wrap an olive branch and place it beside your head, beneath the left side of your head, and go to sleep, pure, on a rush mat on the ground, saying the spell 7 times to the lamp: 665 papyrus / under the lamp, go to sleep in a pure condition. Give answer to no one,

 ENTYTHLCH.¹³³

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

122. The rendering of προκυνή is uncertain. See also PGM VII. 885–86; P. Reinach II, 88 which has προκυνήτε. For similar epithets, see LSJ, s.v. "κυναγέτης, προκυνάγος, προκυνήγης, προκύων." The epithet "earthbreaker" has usually in PGM been transcribed RĒXICHTHŌN.

123. The following list of divine epithets comes from the cult of Artemis; it contains old material, but not all is explainable and some renderings are quite tentative. Cf. for parallels PGM IV. 1301–8, 1345–79; also P. Reinach II, 88 (ed. P. Collart, Les Papyrus Théodore Reinach, BIFAO 39 [1940]: 29–32).

124. For this epithet, see Homeric Hymn 27. 2 and K. Wernicke, "Artemis," PRE 2 (1895): 1384.

125. The rendering of εὐπαία is uncertain. See Euripides, Hippol. 160, also Burkert, Griechische Religion 236.

126. Preisendanz translates, "O goddess of Erymna."

127. On this epithet of Artemis, see also PGM IV. 1298; Orph. Frag. 42.

128. The meaning of this epithet is uncertain; for similar expressions, see K. Wernicke, PRE 2 (1895): 1399–1400.

129. The name is given below, ll. 716–18; cf. 708–9.

130. PSICHOM is Egyptian p3 sḫm, "the image/power." [R.K.R.]

131. THŌOUTH PHEUBĒ . . . PHRĒ corresponds to Egyptian "Thoth the ibis . . . Prē." [R.K.R.]

132. For the wing formation of magical words, see PGM I. 11 and n.

133. This is Demotic mtw.f.ti bl.k (?), "and he makes you fly" (?). [R.K.R.]

PGM VII. 727–39

Charm for a direct vision of Apollo: In a ground-floor room without light, while you are crowned with a wreath of marjoram and while wearing wolf-skin sandals, recite this formula:

Formula: / “Helios, ruler of light, MER . . . EIPHRA GARGERI PHTHA ER 730

After you have said these things, the god Apollo will come having a cup for a 735 drink offering. Then you inquire concerning what you want. He gives from memory if you want, and if you ask, he will let you drink from his cup.

Dismissal: “ERKIKCHI BELTÊAMILICHA ARCHARZEIR PHIZÖR GEIRPHEI.”

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

*[Request for a dream oracle: Write] on a strip of tinfoil, and after crowning the 740 strip of foil with myrtle, set up the censer. Then make a burnt offering of frankincense and carry the leaf of metal around the vapor while saying: “Lords, gods, reveal to me concerning the NN matter / tonight, in the coming hours. Emphatically 745
 I beg, I supplicate, I your servant and enthroned¹³⁴ by you.”

Then place the piece of foil under your pillow, and, without giving answer to anyone, go to sleep after having kept yourself pure for 3 days.

Formula to be written: / “MOU AMOU¹³⁵ AU IAÔ ABARBARASA AIÔ BAÔA CHPHÊ- 750

 703–76. In this one, however, the title has been added by Preisendanz.

PGM VII. 756–94

Take still another leaf of the royal laurel and write with cinnabar [ink] this name of [the] living god: “CHALCHANA PHOE KOSKIANŌ (19) / ALĒMONTALL . . . ASEICH.” 825
Having written it, do this for three days: wrap the leaves in a new handkerchief and lay it under your head. Having come when it is evening, while burning frankincense, speak this formula:

“I call upon you, holy angel ZIZAUBIŌ, from the company of the Pleiades to whom you are subordinate / and serve for all things, [for] whatever she might com- 830
mand you, you great, indestructible, fire-breathing one, who cast the rope of heaven, through which rope all things turn upon earth. Also, you [do I call upon], as many of you angels who are placed under his [ZIZAUBIŌ’s] power. Hence I call 835 upon you all that you may come quickly / in this night, and reveal to me clearly and firmly, concerning those matters I desire. I conjure you, O lord, who rise above the earth of the whole cosmic region, by the one ruling the whole inhabited world and the benefactor of all. Hence, I call upon you in this night, / and may you reveal all 840 things to me through dreams with accuracy, O angel ZIZAUBIŌ.”

Go to your house and having incensed the branch, put it on your head and sleep pure. You must have [the place] where you perform absolutely pure, and the phylac-

137. In this list most of the numerical designations 1–12 can be recognized in the far right column of the papyrus manuscript, numbering downward from Aries to Pisces. These numbers were erroneously included in the magical symbols by Preisendanz.

138. Har-Month is Horus-Montu. Montu is the Egyptian god of war and therefore the proper counterpart of Ares, the ruler of the zodiacal sign Aries. Horus is also associated with this sign, for “Horus the Red” was the name of Mars which governs Aries. [R.K.R.]

*Shadow¹³⁹ on the sun: After you have purified yourself, walk towards the sun in the 5th hour, crowned with a tail of a cat, and say: “ERBETH BIO . . . PH . . . PH . . . LL . . . PHI THEIRIÖRYS PHERIA PHORPHOROPHI.”

When you have said these things, you will see a shadow in the sun. / Close your eyes, look up, and you will see a shadow standing before you. Ask what you want, “ERBAIGÖRYTHARPHTHEIR.” 855

*Lunar spell of Claudianus¹⁴⁰ and [ritual] of heaven and the north star¹⁴¹ over lunar offerings: This papyrus itself, the personal property of the Twelve Gods, was found¹⁴² in Aphrodiropolis [beside] the greatest goddess, / Aphrodite Urania, who 865 embraces the universe.

The preparation for Mistress Selene is made like this: Take clay from a potter’s wheel and mix a mixture¹⁴³ with sulfur, and add blood of a dappled goat and mold an image of Mistress Selene the Egyptian,¹⁴⁴ as shown below, making her in / the 870 form of the Universe. And make a shrine of olive wood and do not let it face the sun at all.¹⁴⁵ And after dedicating it with the ritual that works for everything, [put it away,] and thus it will be dedicated in advance. And anoint it also with lunar ointment and wreath it. And late / at night, at the 5th hour, put it away, facing Selene 875 in a [pure] room. And also offer the lunar offering and repeat the following in succession and you will send dreams, you will bind with spells. For the invocation to Selene is very effective. And after anointing yourself in advance [with] the ointment, appeal to her.

And this is the lunar spell: / “I call upon you, Mistress of the entire world, ruler 880 of the entire cosmic system, greatly powerful goddess, gracious [daimon], lady of night, who travel through the air, PHEROPHORĒ ANATHRA . . . OUTHRA. Heed

139. On the significance of the shadow, see Betz, “The Delphic Maxim,” 163–64.

140. Preisendanz indicates the name Klaudianos may refer to a certain philosopher and alchemist appearing in a list in Berthelot and Ruelle, Collection des anciens alchimistes grecs 26, I. 1.

141. The identity of the constellation of the Bear with Aphrodite-Selene is late. See Plutarch, Amat. 19, and F. Schwenn, “Selene,” PRE, 2nd ser. 2 (1921): 1142; W. Fauth, “Arktos in den griechischen Zauberpapyri,” ZPE 57(1984): 93–99. [R.K.R.]

142. On this literary claim of having found books, see W. Speyer, Bücherfunde in der Glaubenswerbung der Antike, Hypomnemata 24 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck and Ruprecht, 1970).

143. The pleonasm (μῖξον μίγματος, “mix a mixture”) is not uncommon in PGM; see PGM VII. 972. [E.N.O.]

144. The Egyptian Selene is the mistress of the night sky. See Bleeker, Hathor and Thoth 46. [R.K.R.]

145. Preisendanz has incorrectly translated τὸ σύνολον with “das Ganze.” Cf. I. 915 below, for the sense of the instruction. [E.N.O.]

885 your sacred symbols and give a whirring sound,¹⁴⁶ [and] give a sacred angel or a holy assistant who serves / this very night, in this very hour, PROKYNĒ BAUBŌ PHOBEIOUS MĒE, and order the angel to go off to her, NN, to draw her by her hair, by her feet; may she, in fear, seeing phantoms, sleepless because of her passion for me and her love for me, NN, come to my consecrated bedroom.”

890 So goes the song. But when / you see the goddess turning red, know that she is now attracting, and then say: “Mistress, send forth your angel from among those who assist you, one who is leader of night, because I adjure [you] by your great names, because of which no aerial or infernal daimon can ignore you, MESOUR-
895 PHABABOR BRAL IĒŌ ISI Ē. Come to me just as I have summoned you, / ORTHŌ BAUBŌ NOĒRE KODĒRE SOIRE SOIRE ERESCHIGAL SANKISTĒ DŌDEKAKISTĒ AKROUROBORE KODĒRE SAMPSEI; hear my words, and send forth your angel who is appointed over the 1st hour: / MENEBAIN, and the one over the 2nd hour: NE-
900 BOUN, and the one over the 3rd hour: LĒMNEI, and the one over the 4th hour: MORMOTH, and the one over the 5th hour: NOUPHIĒR, and the one over the 6th hour: CHORBORBATH, and the one over the 7th hour: ORBEĒTH, and the one over
905 the 8th hour: PANMŌTH, and the one over the 9th hour: / THYMENPHRI, and the one over the 10th hour: SARNOCHOIBAL, and the one over the 11th hour: BATHIABĒL, and the one over the 12th hour: ARBRATHIABRI, so that you may do this for me; that you may attract, that you may tame on this very night, and so that she, NN
910 (or he, NN) be unable to have success until coming / to me, NN. [May she remain] fully satisfied, loving, desiring me, NN, and may she be unable to have intercourse with another man, except with me alone.”

Now recite the spell many times, and it will attract and bind, and she will love you for all the time of her life. But when you attract her and she has had intercourse 915 with you, then pick up / the goddess and stow her away, giving her magical material, and do not show her to the sun and she will not stop coming, desiring you.

You will act in the same way for the spell to send dreams until you accomplish what you want. The power of the spell is strong. The figure is below.¹⁴⁷

“Come to me, you who are in the everlasting air,¹⁵⁰ you who are invisible, almighty, creator of the gods. Come to me, you who are the unconquerable daimon. Come to me, you who are never grieved for your own brother, Seth.¹⁵¹ Come to me, / you fire-bright spirit. Come to me, you god who are not to be despised, you daimon, and put to silence, subordinate, enslave him, NN, to him, NN, and cause him to come under my feet.” 965

*Tr.: R. R. Hock.

150. For this expression see the parallel in PGM IV. 507–8.
151. This refers to Seth’s murder of his brother Osiris. See H. te Velde, Seth, God of Confusion (Leiden: Brill, 1967) esp. 81–82. [R.K.R.]

PGM VII. 969–72

- 970 A good potion: Take a piece of hieratic papyrus and / write on it: “IAÖ ð ES-TABISASË TOUREÖSAN ATHIACHIÖOUËNOU ACHËMACHOU. Let her, NN, whom NN bore, love me, NN, when she has drunk the drink.”¹⁵²

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil.

PGM VII. 973–80

- 975 A love spell of attraction through touch: Take a scarab and boil it in a good unguent,¹⁵³ / and take the beetle and grind it together with the plant vetch, and place them in a glass cup and say the spell that follows twice: “THÖBARRABAU MI-CHAEËL MICHAËL OSIRIS PHOR PHORBA ABRIËL SESEGGENBARPHARAGGËS IAÖ

- 985 ERESCHIGAL] PERSEPHONË; / attract [to me and bind her], NN, whom NN bore, [to] the man who is [pining away] with [passion for her]; at this very moment, inflame her that she fulfill the nightly desires of NN, whom NN bore. Aye, lord
- 990 NETHMOMAÖ [Helios, enter] into the [soul] of her, NN, whom NN bore, / and [burn her heart], her guts, [her liver, her spirit, her bones. Perform] successfully for me [this] charm,¹⁵⁴ immediately, immediately; [quickly, quickly].”

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil.

PGM VII. 993–1009

- Look [to the] east [and say: “You are the one who thunders,] the one who rains
- 995 and / hurls lightning [at the] right time and dries [in the same way]; come to me, reveal” (add the usual or [write] whatever [you want], and anoint your hand).

- Preparation of the ink: 3 dried figs, 3 stones of the Nicolaus date, 3 fragments of Isis uttered [it and] wrote [it] when, after taking up Osiris, she fit together his separated members. Asklepios¹⁵⁵ [saw] Osiris and admitted that he [could] not [put together] someone who was dead [even] with the help of Hebe¹⁵⁶ or of [anyone else].

*Tr.: W. C. Grese. This fragmentary spell has not preserved its title and so its exact purpose cannot be known.

152. On the pleonasm πιούσα τὸν πότον, cf. PGM VII. 867. [E.N.O.]

153. μύρον is translated by Preisendanz as “Myrrhenöl.” Both translations, however, may be too specific for this unspecified aromatic concoction. [E.N.O.]

154. For this phrase, cf. PGM IV. 295, 2939; XX. 5.

155. Asklepios seems to have taken over the role of Anubis (thus Eitrem, in Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.).

156. The appearance of Hebe, daughter of Hera and Zeus, is surprising in this context. According to Euripides, Heraklid. 847; Ovid, Met. 9. 400, she made Iolaos young again, a deed of proverbial fame.

PGM VII. 1009–16

Divination by a dream: Say / to the . . . double . . . and rub your [head]; and 1010

“I call upon [you], Sabaoth, Michael, Raphael and you, [powerful archangel] Gabriel, do not [simply] pass by me [as you bring visions], but let one of you enter / and reveal [to me] concerning the NN matter, AIAI ACHĒNĒ IAŌ.” Write these 1015 things [on leaves . . .] of laurel and place them by your head.

*Tr.: W. C. Grese.

PGM VII. 1017–26

*“[Hail, Helios!] Hail, Helios! Hail, [Gabriel! Hail, Raphael! Hail,] Michael! Hail, whole [universe! Give me] the [authority] and power of SABAŌTH, the / [strength of IAŌ], and the success of ABLANATHANALBA, and [the might of] AK- 1020 RAMMACHAMAREI. Grant that I [gain] the victory, as I have summoned you” (then write the 59-[letter] IAEŌ formula). “Grant [victory] because I know the names of the Good Daimon, HARPON [CHNOUPHI] BRITATĒNŌPHRI BRISAROUAZAR BASEN / KRIPHI NIPTOUMI CHMOUMAŌPHI (add the usual) and accomplish this 1025 for me.” Speak to [no one].

*Tr.: R. F. Hock. Although untitled, this spell is a “favor and victory” charm. Cf. PGM XCII for a similar request for the power and strength of various magical and mythological personalities.

PGM VIII. 1–63

Binding love spell of Astrapsoukos:¹

Spell: “Come to me, lord Hermes, as fetuses do to the wombs² of women. Come to me, lord Hermes, who collect the sustenance of gods and men; [come] to me, NN, lord Hermes, and give me favor,³ sustenance, / victory, prosperity, elegance, beauty 5

I also know what your forms are: ⁴ in the east you have the form / of an ibis, in the west you have the form of a dog-faced baboon, in the north 10 you have the form of a serpent, and in the south you have the form of a wolf. Your plant is the grape which is the olive.⁵ I also know your wood: ebony. I know you, Hermes, who you are and where you come from and what your city is: Her-mopolis. Come to me, lord Hermes, many-named one, who know / the things hid- 15 den beneath heaven and earth. Come [to me], NN, lord Hermes; serve well, benefactor of the world. Hear me and make me agreeable to all the forms throughout the inhabited world. Open up for me the hands of everyone who [dispenses gifts]⁶ and compel them to give me what they have in their / hands. I also know your for- 20 eign names: ‘PHARNATHAR BARACHĒL CHTHA.’ These are your foreign names.

“Whereas Isis, the greatest of all the gods, invoked you in every crisis, in every

1. According to Diogenes Laertius, Prooem. 2, Astrampsychos was the name of one or several Persian magicians. See E. Reiss, “Astrampsychos,” PRE 2 (1896): 1796–97.

2. For parallels to this concept, see PGM III. 603 and n.

3. Here and throughout this section, χάρις is translated “favor,” but the term comes close to meaning “grace.” [E.N.O.]

4. The four animals represent the following deities: the ibis is Thoth, the dog-faced baboon is Anubis, the serpent is Uto, the wolf is another form of Anubis. Their respective positions are partially clear as well: Uto is often the north, Anubis the west (or the south), but why Thoth stands in the east remains a puzzle. [J.B.]

6. Accepting the emendation of Preisendanz.

district, against gods and men and daimons, creatures of water and earth and held 25 your favor, / victory against gods and men and [among] all the creatures beneath the world, so also I, NN, invoke you.⁷ Wherefore, give me favor, form, beauty.
 Hear me, Hermes, benefactor, [inventor]⁸ of drugs; be easy to talk to and hear me, 30 just as you have done everything in the form of your Ethiopian dog-faced baboon, / the lord of the chthonic daimons. Calm them all and give me strength, form (add the usual), and let them give me gold and silver and every sustenance which will never fail. Preserve me always, through all eternity, from drugs and de-35 ceits, every slander and evil tongues, from / every daimonic possession,⁹ from every hatred of both gods and men. Let them give me favor and victory and business and prosperity. For you are I, and I am you;¹⁰ your name is mine, and mine is yours. For I am your image.¹¹ If something should happen to me during this year or this 40 month or this day or this hour, it will happen to the great / god ACHCHEMEN ES-TROPH, the one inscribed on the prow of the holy ship. Your true name has been inscribed on the sacred stele in the shrine at Hermopolis where your birth is. Your 45 true name: OSERGARIACH NOMAPHI. This is your name with fifteen / letters,¹² a number corresponding to the days of the rising moon; and the second name with the number 7, corresponding to those who rule the world,¹³ with the exact number 365,¹⁴ corresponding to the days of the year. Truly: ABRASAX. I know you, Hermes, 50 and you know me. / I am you, and you are I. And so, do everything for me, and may you turn to me¹⁵ with Good Fortune and Good Daimon, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly.”

Take a piece of olive wood and make a small dog-faced baboon sitting down, 55 wearing the winged helmet of Hermes / and a box on its back, and inscribe the name of Hermes on the papyrus and put it in the box. Write in myrrh ink, praying for what you do or what you wish, and after putting a lid on, burn incense and place it where you wish in the middle of the workshop.

60 And the name to be written is: “PHTHORON PHTHIONĒ THŌYTH.” / In addition, write also these great names: “IAŌ SABAŌTH ADŌNAIE ABLANATHANALBA AKRAMMACHAMAREI, 365, give to the workshop business, favor, prosperity, elegance, both to NN himself and to his workshop, immediately, immediately;
 quickly, quickly.”

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil. The title of the spell is misleading, for the spell has nothing to do with love, sex, or attraction of a woman. This is a spell for some shopkeeper to ensure good business. There are traces of mysticism here. See Reitzenstein, Poimandres 19–20. [E.N.O.]

7. On Thoth as Isis’ chief helper, see Bleeker, Hathor and Thoth 132–36. [R.K.R.]

8. The translation follows Preisendanz’s emendation. Cf. below, l. 33 and PGM V. 247–48.

9. συνοχή occurs only here in PGM, and its meaning is uncertain. The verb συνέχω, however, occurs at PGM IV. 1408; V. 126, 131, where each time it seems to refer to daimonic possession. [E.N.O.]

10. For this formula of mutual identity, see PGM VIII. 49–50; XIII. 795. See Betz, “The Delphic Maxim,” 165–68.

11. The term εἰδωλον may show philosophical influence. See PGM XII. 235–36; LXI. 53–55. See Betz, “The Delphic Maxim,” 165–67; J. Bremmer, The Early Greek Concept of the Soul (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1983) 78–80, 83.

12. As the Greek text stands, the name has sixteen letters. The name should be separated OSE-RGARIACH NOMAPHI. The discrepancy must be in the first word because the second is correctly said to have seven letters. The confusion may be due to underlying Egyptian words. [J.B.]

13. That is, the seven planets.

14. Cf. l. 61. The number has the numerical value of Abraxas. See Glossary, s.v. “Abraxas.”

15. The term συρρέπω is rare. See Betz, “The Delphic Maxim,” 164 n. 49.

PGM VIII. 64–110

*Request for a dream oracle of Besa: / On your left hand draw Besa in the way shown to you below. Put around your hand a black cloth¹⁶ of Isis and go to sleep without giving answer to anyone. The remainder of the cloth wrap around your neck. 65

This is the ink with which you draw: Blood of a crow, blood / of a white dove, lumps of incense, myrrh, black writing ink, cinnabar, sap of mulberry tree, rain-water, juice of a single-stemmed wormwood and vetch. With this write. 70

Prayer to him,¹⁷ toward the setting sun:

“Borne¹⁸ on the breezes of the wand’ring winds, /
Golden-haired Helios who wield the flame’s 75
Untiring light, who drive in lofty turns
Around the great pole; who create all things
Yourself which you again reduce to nothing.
For from you come the elements arranged
By your own laws which cause the whole world to Rotate through its four yearly turning points. /
If you go to the depths of earth and reach 80
The region of the dead, send up the truthful Prophet out of that innermost abode.

I beg you LAMPSOÛER SOUMARTA BARIBAS DARDALAM PHORBĒX, lord, send forth your holy daimon ANOUTH ANOUTH SALBANACHAMBRĒ BRĒITH, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly; in this night, come.” / If you wish to call him also for a direct vision, [take] a strip [of linen], soak it in sesame oil you have mixed [with] cinnabar, and place the linen as a wick in a lamp that is not colored red. The lamp should be lighted with sesame oil. Place it opposite you, say the formula, and he will come to you. Have near you / a small tablet so that you may write as much as he says,¹⁹ lest after going to sleep you forger. 85

“I call upon / you, the headless god, having your face beside your feet,²⁰ the one who hurls lightning and thunders; you are the one whose mouth is continually full of fire, the one placed over Necessity. I call upon you, the god placed over Necessity, IAEŌ SABAŌTH ADŌNAI ZABARBATHIAŌ; you are the one lying on a coffin of myrrh, having resin and asphalt as an elbow cushion,²¹ [the one] whom they call ANOUTH ANOUTH. Rise up, daimon. You are not a daimon, but the blood / of the two falcons²² who chatter and watch before the head of Osiris. You are the oracle-giving god SALBANACHAMBRĒ ANOUTH ANOUTH SABAŌTH ADŌNAI IĒ IE IĒ IE” (add the usual). Go to sleep on a rush mat, having an unbaked brick beside your head. 100

What you draw is / of this sort: A naked man, standing, having a diadem on his head, and in his right hand a sword that by means of a bent [arm] rests on his neck, 105

16. See PGM VII. 227 and n.

17. The translation here is tentative because the reading of the papyrus is uncertain. See Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.

18. These dactylic hexameters are part of the reconstructed Hymn 4: vv. 1–6, 11 (7–8 [the identification of lines in Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 239, is incorrect: v. 13 is not included here]). For other versions and sections of Hymn 4, see PGM I. 315–27; IV. 436–61; 1957–89. [E.N.O.]

and in the left hand a wand. If he reveals to you, wipe off your hand with rose perfume. This is the figure / of the rite:

*Tr.: W. C. Grese (ll. 64–74; 81–110) and E. N. O’Neil (ll. 74–81). This particular charm in its present form is actually two charms (a request for a dream oracle and a request for a direct vision) directed to Bes, an originally non-Egyptian god who came to Egypt early and was given many functions, one of which was to provide oracles. The request for a dream oracle contains preparatory instructions and a hymn to the sun that also appears in PGM IV. 436–46 and 1957–68. The request for a direct vision has instructions and a formula of invocation addressed to the “headless god.” This invocation also appears in PGM VII. 233–48 and makes use of language that can also be found in a boast of the “headless god” in PGM IV. 145–58.

PGM IX. 1–14

*“I’ll give you rest from wrath and soothe your raging.”¹ Come, lord BAINCHŌŌCH, with your father ANIBAINCHŌŌCH, with your mother CHECHPHIŌ, with your two bodyguards CHENGĒBIŌCHTHŌ MYSAGŌTH ECHE ŌŌ MYSAGŌTH ACHPHIPHĪŌ IAIA ŌCH SEBAU PHRĒ IŌ RĒXICHTHŌN YŌĒŌ AEAEĒIOYŌ CHYCH-BACHYCH BAUACHYCH BAKAXICHYCH BAZABACHYCH MENEBAHYCH BADĒDOPHŌ BAINCHŌŌCH. On the back of the lamella: “EULAMŌ SISIRBBAIĒRSESI PHERMOU CHNOUŌR ABRASAX. Bring into subjection, enslave, and put to silence the soul, the wrath [of him, NN], because I adjure you by the / awful Necessity MASKELLĪ MASKELLŌ PHMOUKENTABAŌTH OREOBAGRA RĒXICHTHŌN HIPPOCHTHŌN PYRIPĒGANYY LEPETAN LEPETAN PHNOUNOBOĒ.” On the front [write] the person’s name.

The introduction to the rite:

“I’ll² give you rest from wrath
And soothe your raging.
Come silently and bring Silence and keep it.
Stop ev’ry wrath in souls
And melt all anger
Of those with temper, because I call upon your authentic name, BAINCHŌŌCH.” Say this name, [written] at the top of the metal leaf: “IAŌMORMOROTOKONBAI.”

1. The introduction to this spell cites only the first line of the “prologue” given in ll. 12–14.

2. These lines have been arranged in iambic trimeters and are the reconstructed Hymn 30. See Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 266. [E.N.O.]

PGM X. 36–50

PGM XI.a 1–40

Apollonius of Tyana's old serving woman*: Take Typhon's skull¹ and write the following characters on it with the blood of a black dog: "☐ ☐ ☐ ☐ ☐ SABERRA." Then, going to a suitable place, by a river, the sea, or at the fork of a road, in the middle of the night put the skull / on the ground, place it [under] your left foot, and speak as follows.

- The formula: "ERITHYIA² MEROPĒ GERGIŌ CHĒTHIRA ANAPEROUCH . . . LYRŌPHIA GĒGETHIRA LOLYN GOUGŌGĒ AMBRACHA BI . . . AEBILĒ MARITHALA MPROUCHE ABĒL ETHIRAŌ AP . . . ŌCHORIĒLA MŌRĒTHIRA PHECHIRŌ ŌSRI 10 PHOIRA AMERI . . . PHĒ. OUTHĒRA / GARGERGIŌ TITHEMYMĒ MĒRAPSĒCHIR AŌRIL. Come, appear, O goddess called Mistress of the House."³

- After you say this, you will behold sitting on an ass a woman of extraordinary loveliness, possessing a heavenly beauty, indescribably fair and youthful. As soon as you see her, make obeisance and say: "I thank [you], lady for appearing to me. / 15 Judge me worthy of you. May your Majesty be well disposed to me. And accomplish whatever task I impose on you."

82 (on a magical ritual), a line which Virgil, Ecl. 8. 41, and the author of the Ciris (l. 430) copied. See Gow's note to Idyll 2. 82, Theocritus, vol. II, 51–52. [E.N.O.]

4. The translation follows the text of Preisendanz, which has the editor's insertion (ἡ πέταλον) to conform with the occurrence of the noun in l. 39. The emendation, however, may not be necessary.

1. "Typhon's skull" is the semantic equivalent of the skull of an ass. See C. Colpe, "Geisrer (Dämonen)," RAC 9 (1978): 620–21; H. Kees, "Seth," PRE, 2nd ser. 4 (1923): 1896–1922; esp. 1899, 1920–21; W. Fauth, "Seth-Typhon, Onoel und der eselköpfige Sabaoth," Oriens Christianus 57 (1973): 79–120.

2. This seems to be the reading of the papyrus, but it is not certain. Preisendanz treats the word as a proper name. One may also read ελευθρία on the grounds that both it and μεροπε which follows immediately are names suitable for the goddess Nephthys. [J.B.]

3. "Mistress of the house" is a direct translation of the Egyptian name Nephthys, sister of Isis, and (as is stressed in this spell) wife of Seth. Thus she is fittingly associated with an ass. See Bonnet, RARG 519–21, s.v. "Nephthys"; Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 305, 447. [J.B./R.K.R.]

The goddess will reply to you, “What do you have in mind?”

You say, “I have need [of you] for domestic service.”

At that, she will get off the ass, shed her beauty, and will be an old woman.⁴ And the old woman will say to you, “I will serve and attend you.”

After she tells you this, the goddess will again put on her own beauty, which she had just taken off, / and she will ask to be released.⁵

But you say to the goddess, “No, lady! I will use you until I get her.”

As soon as the goddess hears this, she will go up to the old lady, and will take her molar tooth and a tooth from the ass and give both to you; and after that it will be impossible for the old woman to leave you, unless perhaps you want to release her. From that time forth, you will receive a bounty of great benefits, for everything that your soul desires will be accomplished by her. She will guard all your possessions⁶ / and in particular will find out for you whatever anyone is thinking about you.⁷

Indeed she will tell you everything and will never desert you: such is her store of good will toward you. But if ever you wish, there is a way to release her (but never do this!). Take her tooth and the ass’s tooth, / make a bonfire, and throw them into the fire, and with a shriek the old woman will flee without a trace. Do not be prone to release her, since it will be impossible for you to replace her.

30

But do release the goddess, when you are sure that the old woman will serve you, by speaking as follows: “MENERPHER PHIE PRACHĒRA LYLŌRI / MĒLICHARĒ NECHIRA.” When the old woman hears this, the goddess will mount the ass and depart.

35

The phylactery to be used throughout the rite: The skull of the ass. Fasten the ass’s tooth with silver and the old lady’s tooth with gold, and wear them always; for if you do this, it will be impossible for / the old woman to leave you. The rite has been tested.

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky. For similar “gimmicks,” see the translation and notes on PGM VII. 167–85. The translation adopts the restorations mentioned in the apparatus criticus of Preisendanz.

4. At this point, the old woman and the goddess assume separate identities. [H.M.]

5. On this point see PGM LXX. 11 and Betz, “Fragments,” 291.

6. Reading with Eitrem πάντα δέ σοι, instead of Preisendanz’s καὶ τὰδε σοι. [H.M.]

7. Or “whatever anyone is plotting against you.” [J.B.]

You say, “Do such-and-such and I will light your torches.” If she sends a dream, you are to light them and she will fly away. / If you send her to kill somebody, give 10

- 15 *Eros⁷ as assistant. / A ritual of Eros: consecration and preparation (among his operations, he sends dreams or causes sleeplessness; and he releases from an evil spirit, if you use him in a proper and holy manner, for he can perform every operation). Take [wax] of Etruria⁸ and mix with it [every] kind of aromatic plant. Then make a statue of a torch-bearing Eros that is eight dactyls⁹ high and has a large base to support it. Put a bow / and arrow in [his left] hand, and fashion a Psyche¹⁰ of 20 the same sort as Eros.

When you have completed all this, conduct a three-day consecration. You are to present to Eros fresh fruits of every kind and 7 cakes, 7 pinecones, every kind of sweetmeat, 7 lamps not colored red; also, [three] daggers, votive tablets, a bow and arrow, dates, a bowl mixed with honey wine.

- 25 After you make the statues and the presentation as indicated, next place your Eros on a table laden with the fruit / and holding both the 7 lamps, ablaze with clear olive oil, and all else listed so as to win the favor of wondrous Eros.

- On the first day, after you put him on the table and arrange things as prescribed—and I describe its form in full for you, that you may understand and lack no detail—build a pure altar; that is, take two unbaked bricks and form them into 4 30 horn-shaped objects, on which you lay fruit-bearing branches. / Take also on the first day 7 living creatures and strangle them: one cock, a partridge, a wren, a pigeon, a turtledove, and any two nestlings you can get hold of. Do not make a burnt offering¹¹ of any of these; instead, you are to take them in hand and choke them, all the while holding them up to your Eros, until each of the creatures is suffocated and their breath¹² enters him. After that, place the strangled creatures on 35 the altar together with aromatic plants / of every variety.

On the second day, strangle a male chick before your Eros and burn it as a whole offering.

On the 3rd day, place another chick on the altar; while conducting this portion of the ritual, consume the chick by yourself, allowing no one else to be present. I assure you, if you perform the above actions in a holy and pure manner, you will have complete success.

- 40 First formula to be spoken while making the burnt offering: / “I call upon you, who are on the couch of beauty, who are in the mansion of desire: serve me and, no matter where I send you, always bear the message I give you, likening yourself to some god (or goddess) such as men and women there worship, announcing all that is written out or imparted to you in speech, quickly!

6. It is not certain what the phylactery is, although it may be the shroud.

7. Cf. PGM VII. 479 for a parallel.

8. For this substance, see PGM IV. 3131.

9. That is, the measure of the finger's breadth, about 7/10 of an inch.

11. This refers to the so-called holocaust, in which the sacrificial gifts are burnt completely (cf. PGM IV. 2396, 3148–49). See Nilsson, GGR I, 132; J. Milgrom, IDB.S (1976): 769–70 on ‘ôlā.

12. For this peculiar purpose of sacrifice, see PGM XIII. 377.

“Fire overtook the greatest phantoms, and heaven swallowed unawares the orb of the holy scarab / called ‘PHŌREI.’¹³ Scarab, the winged ruler in midheaven, was be-headed, dismembered, and wasted his greatness and glory; they confined him and took another as master of heaven.¹⁴ You take note, and serve as my minister to any-one I choose, man or woman.

“Come to me, O master of heaven, who shine upon the world of men; serve as my minister, whether to men or to women, whether to the small or to the great, and / compel them always to do everything written by me.

“Come to me, O master of forms, and arouse men and women for me; force them by your ever-strong and mighty authority to do everything written or spoken by me, EISAPHSANTA PHOUREI ARNAI SYSYN PHREŌ¹⁵ RIŌBAIOSOI, you are ATEPHTHO AŌREL ADŌNAI; afflict them with fear, trembling, terror; trouble their thoughts / with fear of you. And do everything prescribed for [me], NN. If you disobey me, the sun’s orb will burn out and darkness will cover the whole world. The Scarab will come down until you do for me everything I write or say—in strict obedience to me; immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly.”

Second [formula] to be spoken while making the burnt offering: “I conjure you by the one who controls the universe, laid the four foundations, and mixed the 4 / winds. You are the one who sends lightning, you are the one who thunders, you are the one who shakes, you are the one who overturned all things and set them up again. Cause all men and all women to turn to love me, the man NN (or the woman NN), from the very hour when I make my petition with this binding charm,¹⁶ on order from the most high god,¹⁷ IAŌ ADŌNEAI ABLANATHANALBA. You are the one who embraces the Graces on the mountain top, LAMPSRĒ; you are the one who holds Necessity in your right hand, BELTEPIACH; you are the / one who looscs and binds, SEMESIELAMP EKRIPIH. Obey me from this day forth even unto all time.”

Third formula for the same offering: “I call upon you, gods of heaven and gods of earth, gods aerial and gods terrestrial. And I conjure you by the one who controls the 4 foundations, to accomplish for me, the man NN (or the woman NN) such-and-such a matter and to give me favor, sweet speech, charm with all men / and all women under creation, that they may be submissive to my every wish, inasmuch as I am the slave of the most high god, the almighty who controls the universe, MARMARIŌTH LASIMŌLĒTH ARAAS . . . S SĒBARBAŌTH NOŌ AŌI ŌIĒR (add the spice)¹⁸ AAAAA ĒĒĒĒĒĒ ŌŌŌŌŌŌŌ. I give orders to Eros, who is charged with carrying out these my commandments, inasmuch as I am god of all gods, IAŌN SABAŌTH ADŌNAI [ABRASAX] IARABBAI / THŌURIŌ THANAKERMĒPH PAN-CHONAPS.”

The above formulas must be used and [spoken] during the 3 days if you are to endow the rite with full potency. But when you dispatch your Eros to accomplish

13. The relationship between the holy scarab and the name PHŌREI is not clear. Cf. the voces magicæ below, I. 53 (PHOUREI) and the apparatus ad loc.

14. The reference to scarab mythology in ll. 45–47 is syncretistic and reminiscent of the dismemberment of Osiris. See S. Eitrem, “Sonnenkäfer und Falke in der synkretistischen Magie,” in Pisciculi. Festschrift für F. Dölger (Münster: Aschendorff, 1939) 94–101.

15. PHREŌ is “Prē the great.” It should be noted that the sun god is in conjunction with the scarab. [R.K.R.]

16. The papyrus reads παραψιμω (LSJ, s.v.: “charm acting by means of touch”); the translation follows Preisendanz’s reading παραφριμω (“Zauberzwang”). See the apparatus ad loc.

17. For this epithet of IAŌ ADŌNAI, cf. PGM IV. 1068; XVI. 9. See G. Bertram, TDNT 8 (1972): 618–19, s.v. “ὕψιστος.”

18. The papyrus reads ἄρπημα, “ornament”; Preisendanz takes it to be ἄρτυμα, “spice.”

25. Cf. for this ink PGM VII. 653; XIa. 2.

26. Preisendanz translates “on the male egg of a bird.” The idea is less of a problem when the egg is taken to be an image of the primordial egg, in which the first god comes to existence. See PGM III. 145 and n.

27. CHPHYRIS is the scarab. See PGM VII. 584 and n.

Stand outside and say the spell six or seven times thus: “I call upon you great gods, with a loud voice, / AISAR AIŌTH OUAIGNŌR MARSABŌOUTŌRTHE LABATH ERMOU CHOŌRTHEN MANACHTHŌRPH PECHRĒPH TAŌPHPŌTHTHŌCHO THARŌCH BALETHAN CHEBRŌOUTHAST ADŌNAI HARMIŌTH.”

Whenever [you say] this spell, and he has been released, say this besides, in order that the doors might open: “OCHLOBARACHŌ LAILAM DARIDAM [DARDAM] DARDARAMPTOU IARTHA IERBA DIERBA BARŌTHA THIARBA ARBITHŌ . . . Ō MAAR SEMESILAM MARMARACHNEU MANE THŌTH; holy one, enter and release him, NN, and give him a way / of escape, SESEGENBARPHARAGGĒS, you who loosen all 48. For an ibis-faced Hermes, see PGM VIII. 10.

49. Or “such and such.” That is, the practitioner supplies here his request. See below, l. 151.

50. Osiris and Isis are the parents of Horus, not of Thoth/Hermes as one might infer from the preceding.

51. See n. 49 above.

52. Cf. the lex sacra from Halikarnassos, published by M. Çetin Şahin, “Five Inscriptions from Halicarnassus,” ZPE 20 (1976): 22–23. [W.B.]

53. When depth, breadth, length, and brightness are summoned, this may indicate the reenactment of creation. In such a context, a serpent-faced deity (l. 159) would be appropriate, because the serpent form is the primordial form of the gods. See K. Sethe, Amun und die Acht Urgötter von Hermopolis (Berlin: Akademie-Verlag, 1929) 26–27. [R.K.R.]

54. This title for the spell does not appear in the papyrus manuscript and has been supplied by Preisendanz. It is, however, typical of other spells to begin with the phrase, “If you wish to do (this and this). . . .” Cf. e.g., PGM XII. 179–81; XIII. 239–64, and often. [R.D.K.]

bonds and you who loosen the iron fetter that has been placed around him, NN, because the great, unutterable, holy, righteous, awful, powerful, unspeakable, fearful and not-to-be-despised daimon of the great god commands you, SOROERMER [PHERGAR] BAX MAMPHRI OURIXG.”

When the bonds break, say: “I thank you, lord, [because] the holy spirit, the unique one, the living one, has [released] me.”

175 And say this spell again: / “Star-grouping god, you thunderbolt-with-great-clap-Zeus-confining-world-flashing-abundant-bolt-bestowing daimon, cracking-through-the-air, ray-producing, mind-piercing, you who [produce] cunning.”

And use also the name of Helios for everything: “Fiery, ἙΦΑΙἸ, Hephaistos, who is shining with fire, brightly moving, ANANŌCHA AMARZA MARMARAMŌ.”

*If you want someone to cease being angry with you, write with myrrh [on linen]⁵⁵ this / name of anger: “CHNEŌM.”⁵⁶ Hold it in your left [hand and say]: “I am restraining the anger of all, especially of him, NN, which is CHNEŌM.”

*Tr.: R. F. Hock.

PGM XII. 182–89

*“Greetings, lord, you who are the means to obtain favor for the universe and for the inhabited [world]. Heaven has become a dancing place [for you], ARSENO-PHRĒ, O king of the heavenly [gods], ABLANATHANALBA, you who possess right-

55. Or byssus.

56. CHNEŌM here and in l. 181 is probably Egyptian Khnum. Cf. PGM I. 29. [R.K.R.]

57. MNĒCH SAKMĒPH corresponds to Egyptian “beneficent, son of Agathodaimon.” For Kneph, Knephis, cf. PGM I. 27; μνηχ is Egyptian mnḥ, an adjective of the preceding noun. Cf. PGM II. 77. [R.K.R.]

58. A noun seems to be missing here.

59. The name of Jesus appears at the beginning of an invocation; the rest is lost.

60. The term ἰώσις or ἐξίωσις (l. 198) probably refers to the process of reduction in alchemy. Since there is no gold included in the papyrus until l. 198, the process may actually be designed to produce vinegar for 3 days, and strain off [and] / use. Then add one drachma blue vitriol [cupric sulfate] to the vinegar, 1/2 obol in weight of chalcopyrite, 8 obols of rock alum, 1/2 obol in weight of melanterite, a carat [viz., 1/1728 lb. = siliqua] of ordinary salt, 2 [carats] of Cappadocian [salt]. 195

Make a leaf [of metal] of 2 fourths by weight, dip [it] 3 times into fire until the leaf [breaks up] into fragments. Then take up the pieces [and] assume them as “reduced” to the metallic state of gold.

Treatment: Take [2] fourths by weight of gold, make a leaf and [purify it in] fire, dip it in blue vitriol / triturated with water. 200

And another [treatment]: Pound dry cupric sulfate and dip [it] in the vinegar.

(Yet another [treatment]: with the compound): Pour off the verdigris and throw it in.

PGM XII. 201–69

Placing (a) ring.⁶¹ A little ring [useful] for every [magical] operation and for success. Kings and governors [try to get it]. Very effective. Taking an air-colored⁶² jasper, engrave on it a snake in a circle with its tail in its mouth, and also in the middle of [the circle formed by] the snake [Selene]⁶³ having two stars / on the two 205 horns, and above these, Helios, beside whom ABRASAX should be inscribed; and on the opposite side of the stone from this inscription, the same name ABRASAX, and around the border you will write the great and holy and omniscient [spell], the name IAŌ SABAŌTH. And when you have consecrated the stone⁶⁴ wear it in a gold ring, when you need it, [provided] you are pure [at that time], and you will succeed in everything you may wish. You are to consecrate the ring together with the stone in the rite used for all [such] objects. A similar engraving in gold, / too, is equally 210 effective.

The consecration [requires] the following equipment: Making a pit in a holy place open to the sky, [or] if [you have none] in a clean, sanctified tomb looking toward the east, and making over the pit an altar of wood from fruit trees, sacrifice an all-white goose, with no flecks [of color], and 3 roosters and 3 pigeons. Make these whole burnt offerings and burn, with the birds, all sorts of incense. Then, standing by the pit, look / to the east and, pouring on a libation of wine, honey, 215 milk, [and] saffron, and holding over the smoke, while you pray, [the stone] in which are engraved the inscriptions, say:

“I invoke and beseech the consecration, O gods of the heavens, O gods under the earth, O gods circling in the middle region from one womb. O masters of all living and dead, [O] heedful in many necessities of gods and / men. O concealers of 220 things now seen, O directors of the Nemeseis⁶⁵ who spend every hour with you,”⁶⁶ pseudo gold. This is in keeping with the fact that the section 193–201 is full of technical terminology from alchemy. See M. P. Crosland, Historical Studies in the Language of Chemistry (London: Heinemann, 1962) 3–4, and esp. 54; A. J. Hopkins, “Transmutation by Colour: A Study of Earliest Alchemy,” in J. Ruska, ed., Studien zur Geschichte der Chemie. Festschrift E. O. von Lippmann (Berlin: Springer, 1927) 9–14. [J.S.]

61. The symbols printed in Preisendanz’s text as magical characters are Demotic w’ gswr, “a ring.” Cf. PGM XII. 270. [R.K.R.]

62. According to LSJ, s.v., a “light-blue” or perhaps “grey, cloudy” color.

63. That is, a crescent moon.

64. On the consecration of amulets, see PGM IV. 2179 and n.

65. For the Nemeseis, cf. PGM VII. 503 and n.; Griffiths, The Isis-Book 311–12.

66. The papyrus here accidentally repeats the preceding clause about the Nemeseis.

O senders of Fate who travels around the whole world, O commanders of the rulers, O exalters of the abased, O revealers of the hidden, O guides of the winds, 225 O arousers of the waves, O bringers of / fire (at a certain time), O creators and benefactors of every race, O nourishers of every race, O lords and controllers of kings, come, benevolent, for that [purpose] for which I call you, as benevolent assistants in this rite for my benefit. I am a plant named Baïs (palm leaf); I am an outflow of blood from the tomb of the great One [between] the palm trees;⁶⁷ I am the faith⁶⁸ found in men, and am he who declares the holy names, who [is] always alike, who 230 came forth from the abyss.⁶⁹ I am / CHRATES⁷⁰ who came forth from the eye [of the sun].⁷¹ I am the god whom no one secs or rashly names. I am the sacred bird, Phoinix.⁷² I am Krates the holy, called MARMARAUÖTH. I am Helios who showed forth light. I am Aphrodite called TYPHI.⁷³ I am the holy sender of winds. I am Kronos who showed forth light. I am Mother of gods, called Heaven. I am Osiris, 235 called water. I am Isis, called dew.⁷⁴ / I am ESENEPHYS,⁷⁵ called spring. I am the image resembling the true images. I am SOUCHOS⁷⁶ [who appear as] a crocodile. Therefore, I beseech [you], come as my helpers, for I am about to call on the hidden and ineffable name, the forefather of gods, overseer and lord of all.”

“Come to me, you from the four winds, god, ruler of all, who have breathed 240 spirits into men for life, master of the good things in the world. Hear me, lord, whose / hidden name is ineffable. The daimons, hearing it, are terrified—the name BARBAREICH ARSEMPHEMPHRÖTHOU—and of it the sun, of it the earth, hearing, rolls over; Hades, hearing, is shaken; rivers, sea, lakes, springs, hearing, are frozen; rocks, hearing it, are split. Heaven is your head; ether, body; earth, feet; and the water around you, ocean, [O] Agathos Daimon.⁷⁷ You are lord, the begetter and nourisher and increaser of all.”

67. For the efflux of Osiris, see Book of the Dead, spells 63b sec. S 1; 119 sec. S 1; 147a sec. S 1; 147g sec. S 1; 149n sec. S 1; 149o. [R.K.R.]

68. Preisendanz treats the term as a hypostatized name (Pistis, “Faith”). See Reitzenstein, Die hellenistischen Mysterienreligionen 234–35; D. Lührmann, “Glaube,” RAC 11 (1979): 84–86.

69. Preisendanz takes βυθος to be the name of a deity. Bythos is the name of the primordial deity in Valentinian gnosticism. For passages, see PGL, s.v. “Βυθος”; The Nag Hammadi Library in English, index s.v. “Bythos.” See also Bousset, Hauptprobleme, passim; idem, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 58.

70. Preisendanz, following Eitrem, takes this name to be Egyptian for Chnut, “child (Horus).” Actually, the papyrus reads σοκράτης; see C. Leemans, Papyri Graeci Musei Antiquarii publici Lugduni-Batavi, vol. 2 (Leiden: Brill, 1885) 26–27. Eitrem’s emendation was taken up by J. Kroll, “Chrates,” PRE 11 (1922): 1641–42; K. Preisendanz, “Pachrates,” PRE 18 (1942): 2071–74, esp. 2072. The fact, however, remains that the papyrus reads Socrates in l. 230 and Crates in l. 231.

71. The papyrus reads ουαειου; the translation follows Preisendanz’s emendation ἐκ τοῦ οὐατίου. Cf. PGM V. 75.

72. On the Phoenix, see Tardieu, Trois mythes gnostiques 231–62. Cf. PGM II. 104.

73. Typhi, the epithet of Aphrodite, may correspond to Egyptian Triphis (T3-ṛpy.t), “the maiden.” See Bonnet, RÄRG 838–39, s.v. “Triphis.” [R.K.R.]

74. For Isis as dew, see Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 12, 355F–365A; 33, 364B, and Griffiths, Plutarch’s De Iside et Osiride 303, 420, 424. [R.K.R.]

75. ESENEPHYS may correspond to Egyptian “Isis the beautiful.” Preisendanz, however, understands it to refer to Isis-Neph[th]ys. [R.K.R.]

76. Souchos is Sobek, the Egyptian crocodile god. See Bonnet, RÄRG 755–59, s.v. “Suchos.” [R.K.R.]

77. On the cosmic body of the deity, see PGM XIII. 767–72; XXI. 3–7. See J. Assmann, “Primat und Transzendenz: Struktur und Genese der ägyptischen Vorstellung eines höchsten Wesens,” in Aspekte der ägyptischen Religion, ed. W. “Who⁷⁸ molded the forms of the beasts [of the Zodiac]? Who / found [their] routes? Who was the begetter of fruits? Who raises up the mountains? Who commanded the winds to hold to their annual tasks? What Aion nourishing an Aion rules the Aions? One deathless god. You are the begetter of all and assign souls to all and control all, king of the Aions and lord, [before] whom mountains and plains together tremble, springs and streams of rivers, and valleys of earth, and spirits, and [all things] that are. High shining heaven trembles before you, and every sea, / lord, ruler of all, holy one, and master of all. By your power the elements exist and all things come into being, the route of sun and moon, of night and dawn—all things in air and earth and water and the breath of fire. Yours is the eternal processional way [of heaven], in which your seven-lettered name is established for the harmony of the seven sounds [of the planets] which utter [their] voices according to the 28 forms of the moon. Yours are the beneficent effluxes of the stars, daimons and fortunes / and fates. You give wealth, good old age, good children, strength, food. You, lord of life, ruling the upper and the lower realm, whose justice is not thwarted, whose glorious name the angels hymn, who have truth that never lies, hear me and complete for me this operation so that I may wear this power in every place, in every time, without being smitten or afflicted, / so as to be preserved intact from every danger while I wear this power. Yea, lord, for to you, the god in heaven, all things are subject, and none of the daimons or spirits will oppose me because I have called on your great name for the consecration. And again I call upon you, according to Egyptians, PHNŌ EAI IABŌK; according to Jews, ADŌNAIE SABAŌTH; according to Greeks, “the king of all, ruling alone”; / according to the high priests, “hidden, invisible, overseer of all”; according to Parthians, “OUERTŌ,⁷⁹ master of all.” Consecrate and empower this object for me, for the entire and glorious time of my life.”

The names inscribed on the back side of the stone are these: “IAŌ SABAŌTH ABRASAX.”

A Ring. A little ring for success and favor and victory. It makes men famous and great and admired and rich as can be, or it makes possible friendships with suchlike men. The circlet is always yours [to use] justly and successfully for all purposes. It contains a first-rate name.

Helios is to be engraved on a heliotrope stone⁸⁰ as follows: A thick-bodied snake⁸¹ in the shape of a wreath should be [shown] having its tail in its / mouth. Inside [the circle formed by] the snake let there be a sacred scarab⁸² [beetle surrounded by] rays. On the reverse side of the stone you are to inscribe the name in hieroglyphics, as the prophets pronounce [it]. Then, having consecrated [the ring], wear it when you are pure.

The world has had nothing greater than this. For when you have it with you you will always get whatever you ask from anybody. Besides, it calms the angers of masters and kings. Wearing it, whatever you may say to anyone, you will be believed,

78. The dactylic hexameters (ll. 244–52) are also the reconstructed Hymn 1. See Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 237. [E.N.O.]

79. OUERTŌ corresponds to the Egyptian epithet “the great one of earth.” [R.K.R.]

80. A green chalcedony with small spots of red jasper. Cf. Pliny, NH 37. 165. [J.S.]

81. That is, the Ouroboros serpent. See Glossary, s.v. “Ouroboros.”

When you perform this rite, say [the spell] three times each day, in the third, sixth, and ninth hour, and this for fourteen days, beginning when the moon begins its third quarter. And try to have the goddess [i.e., the moon] either [rising] in [the Zodiacal sign of] the Bull or the Virgin or Scorpion or the Water Carrier or the Demokritos’ “sphere”: prognostic of life and death. Find out what day of the month⁸⁸ the sick one took to bed. Add his name from birth⁸⁹ to the day of the month and divide by thirty.⁹⁰ Look up on the “sphere” the quotient: if the number is on the upper register, the person will live, but if it is on the lower register, he will die.

85. That is, the magical ring.

86. These invocations begin with a formula corresponding to the Egyptian i i3w, “O, hail!” [R.K.R.]

87. PHIRIMNOUN corresponds to Egyptian “He who comes forth from Nun (the abyss).” Cf. PGM XII. 229. [R.K.R.]

88. Literally, “know in relation to the moon.” Beginning with the new moon, each day of the lunar month can be given a number from one to thirty.

89. The praenomen, or first name, among the Romans. Each letter of the Greek alphabet has a numerical value.

90. Literally, “see how many times thirty there are.” In other words, the sum of the numerical value of the name and the value of the day on which the person took ill, is divided by thirty.

The so-called sphere is only a circle or other plane figure, in this case a rectangle, but even when the circle is reduced to a rectangle, it is called a sphere. For full discussion of this kind of “astrological medicine,” see A. Bouché-Leclercq, L’astrologie grecque (Paris 1899, repr. 1963) 537–42, esp. 538, and Thorndike, A History of Magic I, 682ff.; see also V. 365 Charm for causing separation: On a pot for smoked fish inscribe a spell with a bronze stylus and recite it afterwards and put it where they [i.e., your victims] are, where they usually return, repeating at the same time this spell: “I call upon you, god, you who are in the empty air, you who are terrible, invisible, and great, you who afflict the earth and shake the universe, you who love disturbances and hate
370 stability and scatter the clouds / from one another, IAIA IAKOUBIAI IŌ ERBĒTH, IŌ PAKERBĒTH IŌ BOLCHOSĒTH BASDOUMA PATATHNAX APOSS OSESRŌ ATAPH THABRAOU EŌ THATHTHABRA BŌRARA AROBREITHA BOLCHOSĒTH KOKKOLOIPTOLĒ RAMBITHNIPS: give to him, NN, the son of her, NN, strife, war; and to him, NN, the son of her, NN, odiousness, enmity, just as Typhon and Osiris had”⁹¹ (but if it is a husband and wife, “just as Typhon and Isis had”). “Strong Typhon, very / powerful one, perform your mighty acts.”

*Tr.: R. F. Hock. This charm provides a means for effecting a breach between two men’s friendship or love for each other, with a variant formula inserted to make the spell work against a husband and wife.

PGM XII. 376–96

Charm to induce insomnia: Take a living bat and on the right wing paint with myrrh the following figure, and on the left write the 7 names of the god as well as: “Let her, NN whom NN bore, lie awake until she consents.” And so release the bat again.

380 Perform this spell at the waning of the moon⁹² when the goddess is in her third night, and the woman will die for lack of sleep, without lasting / 7 days.

This charm cannot at any time have an antidote. But if you at some time wish one, do not release the bat, but keep it in custody, and do this as well: when you want to release it, wash off with spring water [what] has been written on the wings and release the bird. But do not do this, save for a great intrigue.

PGM XIII. 1–343

- *GOD/GODS.¹ A sacred book called “Unique”² or “Eighth Book of Moses,” 5 concerning the holy Name. Its content goes as follows: Remain / pure 41 days, having calculated in advance so that your completion of them will coincide with the dark of the moon which occurs in Aries.³ Have a house on ground level, in which no one has died during the past year. The door should face west. Now set up in the 10 middle of the house an earthen altar and have ready cypress wood, ten pinecones full of seed,⁴ two white roosters / uninjured and without blemish, and two lamps each holding an eighth of a pint, filled with good oil. And don’t pour in any more, for when the god comes in they will burn more fiercely. Have the table prepared 15 with these following kinds of incense, which are cognate to the god (from this / book Hermes plagiarized when he named the 7 kinds of incense⁵ [in] his sacred book called Wing).⁶

- The proper incense of Kronos is styrax, for it is heavy and fragrant; of Zeus, mal-abathron;⁷ of Ares, kostos; of Helios, frankincense; of Aphrodite, Indian nard; of 20 Hermes, cassia; / of Selene, myrrh. These are the secret incenses (the direction in the Key of Moses,⁸ “Prepare sun vetch on every occasion,” refers with these [words]

1. ἰσοί (“gods”) commonly stands at the beginning of sacral inscriptions from Athens and sites in the Athenian sphere of influence; elsewhere it is rare (see the uses in F. Sokolowski, Lois sacrées des cités grecques, Paris: E. de Boccard, 1969). The use here indicates literary and philosophical preteusions. “GOD” is put above “GODS” both to suggest that the magician has access to a higher power, and to conform to the fashion which, by the time this text was copied (under Constantine’s successors), favored monotheism.

2. “Unique” translates the Greek μόνος, “by oneself, solitary”; in philosophy, primarily Pythagorean, then Platonic, “monad.” Hence also in C.H. 4. 10, on which see Festugière’s n. 28. Philosophic use for the primal deity made the word vague and prestigious, which accounts for its appearance here. The attribution to Moses was due partly to the texts’ content (see below, n. 16), partly to Moses’ fame as a magician. Pliny, NH 30. 11, credited him with starting his own school of magic. Both Jews and gentiles helped the tradition grow by repeating stories about him and circulating magical texts under his name. See J. Gager, Moses in Greco-Roman Paganism (Nashville, Abingdon Press, 1972), chap. 4, pp. 134–61. The compiler of PGM XIII was both a composer and a collector of “Mosaic” texts. He had himself written one called “The Key of Moses” (l. 229), which he often recommends; he had a variorum edition of VIII Moses, giving three texts, and in his additions to it he cites “The Archangelic (Teaching?) of Moses,” Moses’ “secret moon prayer,” and “The Tenth Hidden (Book?) of Moses.” The choice of “eighth” as the number of the book is surprising, since we hear nothing of the sixth and seventh; it may be due to the increasing prestige of the ogdoad (see below, nn. 29 and 112). The choice of “Tenth” for the next numbered book (nothing is heard of a ninth) is also explicable from numerology, ten being the Pythagorean perfect number.

3. The Greek συνόδος here is ambiguous. It was also used loosely to refer to the new moon, and was so understood by Preisendanz, but see l. 349.

4. So Preisendanz, translating δέξιος; alternatively, “with spirals (formed by the edges of the scales) running to the right.”

5. The promised list of incenses “cognate to the (one) god” can hardly be the following list of incenses proper for seven different gods. The author probably inserted a standard list taken from the book of “Hermes” whom he therefore accused of plagiarism.

6. To this “Hermetic” book there is no other reference. Evidently it was the work of a rival author. This comment by the compiler clearly interrupts the earlier text. That “Hermes” is attacked makes the restoration of “Hermetic spell” (in l. 138) dubious.

7. Leaves of Cinnamomum tamala or albiflorum. “Kostos,” which follows, is Sassurea lappa.

8. The two following statements by the compiler again interrupt the text. The Key of Moses was his own book (l. 229), evidently a sort of magician’s handbook with astrological information, etc. There is to the Egyptian bean). Moreover, Manetho gave these directions in his own book.

Then take the 7 flowers of the 7 stars (which are marjoram, white lily, lotus, erythyllinon,⁹ / narcissus, gillyflower, rose); take these flowers twenty-one days before the initiation, and grind them fine in a white mortar¹⁰ and dry them in the shade and have them ready for that day.

First, however, present yourself, on / whatever auspicious new moon occurs,¹¹ to the gods of the hours of the day, whose names you have in the Key. You will be made their initiate¹² as follows: Make 3 figures from fine flour, one bull-faced, one goat-faced, one ram-faced, each of them standing on the celestial pole and holding an Egyptian flail.¹³ And when you have / censed them, eat them, saying the spell for the gods of the hours (which is in the Key) and the compulsive formula for them and the names of the gods set over the weeks. Then you will have been made their initiate.

Next, for the all-important meeting, have a square of natron¹⁴ on which you will write the great name with the seven vowels. Instead / of the popping noise and the hissing [sound in the name] draw on the first part of the natron a falcon-faced crocodile¹⁵ and the nine-formed god standing on him, for this falcon-faced crocodile at the 4 turning points [of the year] greets the god with the popping noise. For, coming up to breathe from the deep, he goes “Pop, pop, pop,” / and he of the 9 forms replies to him antiphonally. Therefore, instead of the popping noise, draw the falcon-faced crocodile, for the popping noise is the first element of the name. The second is a hissing. Instead of the hissing [draw] a snake biting its / tail. So the two elements, popping and hissing, are represented by a falcon-faced crocodile and the nine-formed god standing on it, and around these a snake and the seven vowels.

Now [the great name] is [composed of] 9 names, before which you say [those of] the gods of the hours, with [the prayer on] the stele, and [those of] the gods of the days and of those / set over the weeks, and the compulsive formula for these; for without these the god will not listen but will refuse to receive you as uninitiated, unless you emphatically say in advance the [names of] the lord of the day and of the hour, which information you will find at the end [of this tractate]; for without these / you will not accomplish even one of the things you find in the Key: . . .

no good reason to think it had anything to do with C.H. 10, which was also called Key but dealt with totally different subjects. Manetho was an Egyptian priest who wrote a history of Egypt for Ptolemy II, ca. 275 B.C. The success of this work made him famous; hence many other texts, especially of astrology, but also of magic, were fathered onto him. Which this writer had in mind, is unknown. Cf. PGM III. 440 and n. The content of the Key is described in eight passages in PGM XIII, viz. ll. 21–22, 30–31, 35–36, 59–60, 228–29, 282–83, 431–32, and 735–43. From these it appears that the Key contained directions for performance of rites, names of the gods of the days, hours, etc., spells to control these, and the great name of 6 letters, Ogdoas. Some of the directions were allegorical or allegorized (see ll. 21–22 and 228–29).

9. Unknown.

10. Alternatively, “into white incense.”

11. Literally, “a new moon favored by a god,” meaning one which the god, by giving good auspices, declares favorable for your purposes.

12. Literally, “initiated.”

13. Alternatively, “Egyptian flails.”

14. Sodium carbonate, a soapy substance. This was not a gourmet rite.

15. The falcon-faced crocodile appears on many Egyptian inscriptions. He was a fusion of the crocodile god Sobek and the hawk god Horus. The “nine-formed” was the “Ennead,” an Egyptian complex of nine gods who in the late period were thought to be the members of the body of a single god. See H. Bonnet, RARG, 521–25, s.v. “Neunheit.” The “four turning points of the year” are the equinoxes and solstices. That crocodiles pop off at these periods is an example of the unnatural history surprisingly common in ancient authors from Aristotle on.

Now the [text of the] sacred stele to be written in the natron is:

65 “I¹⁶ call on you, who are greater than all, the creator of all, you, the self-begotten, who see all and are not seen. For you gave Helios the glory and all the / power, Selene [the privilege] to wax and wane and have fixed courses, yet you took nothing from the earlier-born darkness, but apportioned things so that they should be 70 equal. For when you appeared, both order¹⁷ arose and light appeared.¹⁸ All things are subject to you, whose true form none of the gods can / see; who change into all forms. You are invisible, Aion of Aion.

75 “I call on you, lord, to appear to me in a good form, for under your order I serve your angel, BIATHIARBAR BERBIR SCHILATOUR BOUPHROUMTRÔM, and your fear, DANOUPH CHRATOR BELBALI BALBITH IAÔ. / Through you arose the celestial pole and the earth.

80 “I call on you, lord, as do the gods who appeared under your [order?] that they may have power; ECHEBYKRÔM of Helios, whose is the glory,¹⁹ AAA ÊÊÊ ÔÔÔ III AAA ÔÔÔ SABAÔTH ARBATHIAÔ / ZAGOURÊ, the god ARATHY ADÔNAIE.

85 “I call on you, lord, in ‘birdglyphic’²⁰: ARAI; in hieroglyphic: LAILAM; in He-braic:²¹ ANOCH BIATHIARBATH BERBIR ECHILATOUR BOUPHROUMTROM; in Egyptian: ALDABAEIM; in ‘baboonic’: ABRASAX; / in ‘falconic’:²² CHI CHI CHI CHI CHI CHI CHI TIPH TIPH TIPH; in hieratic: MENEPHÔIPHÔTH CHA CHA CHA CHA CHA CHA CHA.” Then clap 3 times, go “pop, pop, pop” for a long time; hiss at some length.

90 “Come [to me], lord, faultless and unflawed, who pollute / no place, for I have been initiated into your name.”

95 Have a tablet in which you will write what he says to you and a two-edged knife, all of iron, so that, clean from all [impurities],²³ you may kill the sacrifices, and a libation (a jug of wine and a flask full of honey /) that you may pour. Have all these ready nearby you. And you be in clean linens, crowned with an olive wreath. Prepare the canopy²⁴ thus: Taking a clean sheet, write on the border [the names of] the 16. This invocation and that following (138–53) are essentially identical, both being variations of an old Egyptian hymn in which the rising sun is greeted by the sacred animals, each kind making its appropriate noises. In both invocations (and their close parallels in the B version—443–61, 570–99; in C only the first lines are cited) the sun god has been made the creator and sustainer of the world, and the songs of the animals are preceded by and partly fused with the songs of the angels, many of whom are Jewish. In both, the same angels and the same languages appear in the same orders. The roles given the god and the angels, and the personnel, help explain the attribution to Moses, the more so because these two invocations are the most important elements in the text—the active agents which make the deity appear (this is particularly clear in B, which, since it put the first invocation after the rite as an appendix, ll. 570–99, followed it by a second epiphany, 608–717).

17. Here “order” translates the Greek κόσμος, which means also “the cosmos.”

18. I.e., light and darkness?

19. Or “the doxology” without following comma, the doxology being the following formula. Here the choice is difficult because “glory” fits Helios, but “doxology” gives the magical words a function in the text, as those in the preceding paragraph functioned as names of the angel and the fear. Δόξα meaning “spoken/sung praise” is found already in LXX; see G. Kittel and G. von Rad, TDNT 2 (1964): 233–55.

20. Greek ὀρνεογλυφιστί, formed by analogy from ιερογλυφιστί, which follows.

21. In spite of the claim that this is Hebrew, the first word is a transliteration of the Egyptian word for “I (am),” anoch. A similar Hebrew word, ʾanoki, has the same meaning. The author seems to have known Hebrew and Egyptian badly enough to mix them up. See Glossary, s.v.

22. Chi chi is the cry appropriate for the morning sun; tiph tiph, for the evening sun. [J.B.]

23. This supposes a purity code in which iron neither received nor transmitted pollution.

24. That is, under which you will receive the god. Perhaps from some mystery rite. (Originally the bridal tent?) Here an unexplained residuum.

365 gods,²⁵ and make it a tent / under which you go to be initiated. Also have a 100 ing beside him and / Pythian serpent. Carve around the Apollo the great name, in 105 Egyptian form; on his chest: BAINCHÖÖCHÖÖCHNIAB, written [the same] forwards and backwards; and on the back of the figure this name: ILILLOU IL-ILLOU / ILILLOU; and around the Pythian serpent and the tripod; ITHOR MAR- 110 MARAUGÉ PHÖCHÖ PHÖBÖCH. Have this too around your neck when you perform the initiation; it is helpful in everything, along with the cinnamon.

Accordingly, as I said before, when you have purified yourself in advance [through 115 the last] / seven days while the moon is waning, at the dark of the moon²⁶ begin sleeping on the ground on a pallet of rushes. Rising at dawn, greet Helios through seven days, each day saying first the [names of the] gods of the hours, then those set over the weeks. Also [each day], / learning who is the ruler of that day, keep after 120 him, saying, “Lord, on such-and-such a day I am calling the god to the sacred sacrifices”—doing so until the eighth day.

Then, when you come to this day, in the middle of the night at about eleven 125 o’clock / when there is quiet, light the altar fire and have at hand the two roosters and the two lamps, lighted (the lamps should hold an eighth of a pint each, and you must not put more oil into them). Begin to recite the stele and the mystery of the god, which is [called?] “Scarab.” Have standing by a mixing bowl containing milk of a black cow / and wine not mixed with seawater, for this is beginning and end.²⁷ 130 Then, having written [the text of] the stele on the two faces of the natron plaque, lick off the one side and, pouring [wine?] on the other, wash it off into the mixing bowl. The natron should be written on [with ink made] both from the incense materials and from the flowers.

Then, before you drink off the milk and wine, say over it / this petition;²⁸ and 135 having said it, lie down on the mat, holding both the tablet and the stylus, and say—Hermetic (?) [spell]:²⁹

“I call on you who surround all things, I call in every language and in every dia- 140 lect, as he first / hymned you who was by you appointed and entrusted with all authorities, Helios ACHEBYKRÖM³⁰ (which signifies the flame and radiance of the disk)³¹ whose is the glory, AAA ĒĒĒ ÖÖÖ, because he was glorified by you—[you]³²

25. The gods of the days of the year.

26. Greek σύννοδος, the twenty-four-hour day in which the moon will come into line with the earth and the sun.

27. I.e., essential, all important, cf. Rv 21:6; 22:13. [M.S.] Seawater was prohibited because the sea was a symbol of Seth, the enemy of Osiris and of fertility. [R.K.R.]

28. The identity of “this petition” is not clear. The prayer on the stele has already been recited (l. 127), the main invocation is to follow; perhaps something has fallen out. A similar problem is posed by C, 684–95. B prescribes a prayer to the gods of the hours.

29. The Greek here is corrupt and the restoration uncertain. See above, n. 6. In B 443ff. this spell has no such designation. The following “You who surround all things” found in all three versions refers to the outermost celestial sphere conceived as a god, i.e., the Ogdoad. See below, n. 112.

30. Ache in Egyptian means “brightness.” Cf. l. 34 above. [J.B.]

31. An obvious gloss. This hymn is full of such. They have been set off by parentheses and henceforth will not usually be pointed out. Many seem to be early, since they appear in both A and B.

32. As the text stands, Helios set the stars in their places and created the world in which, thereafter, “you”—the highest god—set all things in order. This is not totally impossible, but not at all likely. Most likely the writer attributed creation to the highest god (whom he was invoking) and did so either by anacoluthon or by a σὺ (“you,” reduced to σ) before ἀέρας (“winds”), which fell out with the word it preceded.

who set [in their places the winds]³³ and then, likewise, the stars of glittering forms, and who, in divine light / create the cosmos, III AAA ŌŌŌ, in which you have set in order all things. SABAŌTH ARBATHIAŌ ZAGOURĒ (these are the angels who first appeared)³⁴ ARATH ADŌNAIE BASĒMM IAŌ. The first angel cries in ‘bird-glyphic’ ARAI—which is [“Woe to my enemy”—and you have set him] in charge of the punishments. Helios hymns you in hieroglyphic, LAILAM, and in Hebrew by his own³⁵ name, ANOK³⁶ BIATHIARBAR BERBIR SCHILATOUR BOUTHROUMTRŌM / (36 letters);³⁷ he says, ‘I precede you, lord, I who rise on the boat of the sun, the disk (?)’³⁸ thanks to you.’ Your magical³⁹ name in Egyptian is ALDABIAEIM” (9 letters, see below). Now he who appears on the boat rising together with you is a clever / baboon; he greets you in his own language, saying ‘You are the number of [the days of] the year, ABRASAX.’⁴⁰ The falcon on the other end [of the boat] greets you in his own language and cries out to receive food: CHI CHI CHI CHI CHI CHI CHI TIP TIP TIP TIP TIP TIP TIP. He of the nine forms greets you in / hieratic, saying: MENEPHŌIPHŌTH. (He means, ‘I go before you, lord’). . . .”⁴¹

So saying, he clapped 3 times, and the god⁴² laughed 7 times⁴³: “CHA CHA CHA CHA CHA CHA CHA.” When the god laughed, 7 gods were born⁴⁴ (who encompass the cosmos—see above—for these are those who appeared before [the world was formed]).

33. The text is corrupt; I follow Preisendanz’s conjecture, ad loc.

34. This gloss interrupts a list of the first seven angels, probably thought to be the first creatures within the cosmos, certainly the foremost subjects of the cosmocrator, Helios. We should next have a list of their utterances, but it is broken off after the first and replaced by those of the Egyptian gods who accompany the sun god’s boat at sunrise, and among whom Helios (here the sun disk) is a minor deity by relation to the god on the boat.

35. Reading αὐτοῦ for Preisendanz’s αὐτοῦ.

36. See above, n. 21.

37. Numerical glosses of this sort, of which there are many, reflect a special interest of the compiler; see ll. 737–57, his postscript after VIII Moses. Besides their convenience for numerological speculation, they helped copyists check their transcriptions of magical names. Not that copyists always took advantage of the convenience. Here Preisendanz proposes to get the number of letters down to thirty-six by omitting the final r of BERBIR. More interesting is the fact that the compiler evidently did not count ANOK as part of the name, but gave it its Egyptian meaning, “I (am).”

38. “The disk” is an uncertain expansion of an abbreviation otherwise unknown.

39. φυσικόν, meaning “with power to produce physical effects.”

40. The sum of the numerical values of the Greek letters a b r a s a x is 365. See Glossary, s.v. “Abrasax.”

41. Here the sudden change in content and style indicates that something has fallen out of the text. What follows is a fragment from some theogonic and cosmogonic myth, an insertion which runs to l. 206, where the invocation, here interrupted, is resumed. The insertion was found in all three versions (C refers to it as “the account of the making of the world,” but does not quote it, l. 697).

42. “The god” seems to be someone other than the preceding “he”—we have come into the middle of some mythological scene.

43. Seven is common in cosmological contexts. Besides, Gn 1, Prof. Bergman reports that it appears, for instance, in the temple of Esna, where, as here, seven utterances of one god become other gods. See S. Sauneron, Les Fêtes religieuses d’Esna (Cairo: Imprimerie de l’Institut français d’archéologie orientale, 1962) 268–69. 2 Enoch 25–30 combined an Egyptian sequence of seven utterances that produce gods, with the Hebrew sequence of seven commands that produce cosmic changes, and thus produced a muddle.

44. What were born, according to the following text, were not seven but eight pairs of gods, not angels, who do not encompass the cosmos but are involved in it as psychological and physical elements (see n. 45). Therefore the words here set in parentheses look like two glosses, especially because the wording of the second phrase echoes that of the clear gloss in l. 165 (see n. 45). However, the structure of seven laughs—seven emanations seem basic to this cosmology. That the last pair of gods does not come from a laugh but from a comment and an echo, makes it suspect; the list of eight looks like an

When he laughed first, / Phōs-Augē (Light-Radiance)⁴⁵ appeared and irradiated everything and became god over the cosmos and fire, BESSYN BERITHEN BERIO. 165

Then he laughed a second time. All was warer. Earth, hearing the sound, cried out and heaved, and the water came to be divided into three parts. A god appeared; he was given charge of the abyss [of primal waters], for without / bim moisture 170 neither increases nor diminishes. And his name is ESCHAKLEŌ (for⁴⁶ you are ŌĒAI, you are ŌN BETHELLE).

When he wanted to laugh the third time, Nous or Phrenes⁴⁷ [Mind or Wits] appeared holding a heart,⁴⁸ because of the sharpness of the god. He was called Hermes; he was called SEMESILAM. /

The god laughed the fourth time, and Genna [Generative Power] appeared, controlling Spora [Procreation]. [This pair] was called BADĒTOPHŌTH ZŌTHAXATHŌZ. 175

He laughed the fifth time and was gloomy as he laughed, and Moira [Fate] appeared, holding scales indicating that justice was in her province. But Hermes⁴⁹ contested / with her saying, “Justice is my province” (see above). While they were fighting the god said, “What seems to be just will depend on both, but all things in 180 the world will be subject to you, [Moira].” And she was the first to receive the scepter of the world—[Moira] of whom the name written first forward, then backwards, is great and holy and glorious, and it is this: THORIOBRITITAMMAŌR-RANGADŌ Ī ŌDANGARRŌAMMATITIRBOIROTH⁵⁰ / (49 letters). 185

He laughed the sixth time and was much gladdened, and Kairos [Time] appeared holding a scepter, indicating kingship, and he gave over the scepter to the first-created god, [Phōs, who] receiving it, said, “You, wrapping yourself in the glory of adaptation to the Ogdoad (see below, l. 743 and n. 112)—perhaps misunderstood as eight, rather than four, pairs. The fact that this text was augmented by an appendix glorifying the Ogdoad (ll. 743–61), to make up for its absence from the original form, increases our suspicion. Hence the statement that seven gods were born is probably original. The fundamental problem presented by the text cannot be further investigated within the limits of these notes.

45. Thus the papyrus in both passages—here (with αὐγή for αὐγή) and l. 476. This is generation in syzygies, as in many ancient Egyptian and gnostic systems (see below, n. 111). Here the original structure may have been Phōs-Augē, Earth-Water, Nous-Phrenes, Genna-Spora, Moira-Hermes, Kairos-Basilissa (i.e., Sun-Moon), Psyche-Serpent, Phobos-Iaō. In the document used by the sources of PGM XIII this structure had been forgotten. Phōs and Augē had been identified, so had Nous and Phrenes. Nous had also been identified with Hermes. Spora had been reduced to a process controlled by Genna. In at least one version. Basilissa had been omitted. However, the original form is indicated by the needless occurrence of a pair of names at each level, and the frequent pairing of magical names: BERITHEN-BERIO, ESCHAKLEŌ-BETHELLE, HERMES-SEMESILAM, BADĒTOPHŌTH-ZŌTHAXATHŌZ. Another piece of evidence is the recurrence, in the Moira-Hermes and Phobos-Iaō pairs, of the story of original hostility/rivalry followed by fusion of function and name. Another element true to form is that, in the Phōs-Augē syzygy, Augē, being feminine and derivative from Phōs, is that aspect of the pair which is involved in lower being. It is she who appears to the earth (480), and she is probably the δόξα (glory) of Phōs in which sun and moon are clothed (189, 514–20, read αὐγήν for αυραν). So Christ is the ἀπαύγασμα (radiance) of the Father's glory (Heb 1:3).

46. “For you are” introduces another gloss.

47. “Or Phrenes” is taken as a gloss by Preisendanz but may have come from the phrase “and Phrenes” and from an original syzygy (see above, n. 45). In privately written texts καί (“and”) was often abbreviated to K', easily confused with H (“or”).

48. From the Greek side, the heart was the seat of the intelligence in classical times; φρένες, “wits,” literally “midribs,” had earlier been thought the seat of the intelligence, and the word continued in literary use with that sense. For the Egyptian side, cf. Bonnet, RARG 296–97, s.v. “Herz.”

49. Among the things of which Hermes was patron was public speaking, especially argument in the law courts. (The text here is extremely corrupt. I follow Preisendanz's conjecture.)

50. Double g in Greek is pronounced ng, so in the English transliteration of this palindrome the letters n and g change places, but in Greek there is no change.

190 Phōs [Light] / will be with me. . . .⁵¹ ANOCH BIATHIARBAR BERBIR SILATOUR BOUPHROUMTRŌM” (36 letters).

When the god laughed a seventh time Psyche [Soul] came into being, and he wept while laughing. On seeing Psyche, he hissed, and the earth heaved and gave birth to the Pythian serpent who foreknew all things, so the god called him IL-195 ILLOU / ILILLOU ILILLOU ILILLOU ITHŌR MARMARAUGĒ PHŌCHŌ PHŌBŌCH.
Seeing the serpent, the god was frightened and said, “Pop, pop, pop.” When the god said, “Pop, pop, pop,” an armed man appeared who is called DANŌUP CHRATOR BERBALI BARBITH. Seeing him the god was again terrified, as seeing 200 someone stronger [than himself, fearing] / lest the earth had thrown up a god.
Looking down at the earth he said, “IAŌ.” From the echo a god was born who is lord of all. The preceding man contended with him, saying, “I am stronger than this fellow.” The [first] god said to the strong man, “You come from the popping noise, and this [god] comes from an echo. Both of you will have charge of every need.”
205 [The pair] was then called DANŌUP / CHRATOR BERBALI BALBITH IAŌ.⁵²

“Lord, I imitate [you by saying] the 7 vowels;⁵³ enter and hear me, A EE ĒĒ ĪĪ IIII
OOOOO YYYYYY ŌŌŌŌŌŌ ABRŌCH BRAŌCH CHRAMMAŌTH PROARBATHŌ IAŌ

210 / When the god comes in, look down and write the things he says and the Name which he gives you for himself. And do not go out from under your canopy until he tells you accurately, too, the things that concern you.

The technique of determining which god is ruler of the celestial pole [at a given time] goes as follows: Find out, child, to which god the day is subject in the Greek reckoning [counting from the top down], and then coming to / *The Seven-Zoned*⁵⁴
215 count [the same number] from the bottom up, and you will find the answer. For if the day be subject to Helios in the Greek reckoning, Selene rules the pole, and thus the rest, as follows:

	The Greek	The Seven-Zoned
	Helios	Kronos
	Selene	Zeus
220	Ares	Ares
	Hermes	Helios
	Zens	Aphrodite
	Aphrodite	Hermes
	Kronos	Selene

225 / Of these things, child, I have declared to you the easy and godly solution which not even kings were able to grasp.

You are to write on the natron with the ink from the flowers of the 7 [stars] and kinds of incense. Similarly, you are to make “the bean,”⁵⁵ which I described allegorically in my Key, from the flowers and the kinds of incense.

51. For the Kairos-Phōs relation, see ll. 509–19 and nn. Here the text has omitted “the Queen” (the moon) who is the consort of Kairos in this syzygy. The following Anoch is again “I (am)” in Coptic.

52. Here the cosmogonic insertion is broken off and the invocation it interrupted (above, l. 161) is resumed.

53. The supplement comes from the parallel, version C, l. 701. God’s creative power issues in perpetual harmony of which the seven vowels are the expression—“the music of the spheres.”

54. The Seven-Zoned was thought by Festugière, La Révélation I 343, n. 3, to be a planetary sphere, but Festugière’s opinion was based on other evidence; this author seems to have thought the rhing a table or treatise; see below, ll. 722–30.

55. “The bean” was a bean-shaped ball of incense.

The initiation called The Monad has been fully declared to you, child. / Now I subjoin for you, child, also the practical uses of this sacred book, the things which all the experts accomplished with this sacred and blessed book. As I made you swear, child, in the temple of Jerusalem,⁵⁶ when you have been filled with the divine wisdom, dispose of the book so that it will not be found.

The first, then, [of these uses] is the marvelous / [spell for] invisibility: Taking the egg of a falcon, gild half of it and smear the other half with cinnabar. Wearing this you will be invisible when you say the Name.⁵⁷

To fetch a lover: Say the Name 3 times to the sun. It fetches woman to man and man to woman in a way that will amaze you.

If you want someone to be unattractive / —either a woman to a man or a man to a woman: Take a dog's excrement and put it in the post-hole of their door, saying the Name 3 times and saying "I sever NN from NN."

If you say the Name to a demoniac while putting sulfur and asphalt to his nose, the daimon will speak at once and will go away.⁵⁸

If you say it over a man who has erysipelas,⁵⁹ / having rubbed him with crocodile dung, he will be rid [of it] at once.

If you say the Name over a sprain or fracture 3 times, having rubbed it down with earth and vinegar, you will make it go away.

If you say it over any bird, into its ear, it will die.

If you see an asp and want to fix it in its place, say / "Stay!" while turning yourself around. When the names⁶⁰ are said it will stay.

To restrain anger: Enter the presence of a king or magnate, and while you have your hands inside your garment say the name of the sun disk⁶¹ while tying a knot in your pallium or shawl.⁶² You will marvel at the results.

If [you want] to break spells:⁶³ Having written the Name on a page of hieratic papyrus, wear it.

To make Helios appear:⁶⁴ Say toward the east, "I am he / on the two cherubim, between the two natures, heaven and earth, sun and moon, light and darkness, night and day, rivers and sea. Appear to me, O archangel of those subject to the cosmos, ruler Helios, set in authority by the One and Only Himself. The Eternal and Only orders you." Say the Name. And if he appears glowering / say "Give⁶⁵ me

56. Pretentious hokum.

57. Presumably the Name revealed by the god in the climax of the ritual, l. 211.

58. Or, perhaps, "(the man) will speak and (the demon) will go away." For the technique, cf. Josephus, Ant. 8. 47.

59. Or, perhaps, "[the ἐρυσιπέλας] will go away." Cf. Mk 4: 31; diseases were evil beings.

60. The plural here indicates that this list of applications drew on sources not originally connected with the preceding rite to learn the (one) Name. This probably explains the absence of the list from the other versions. "Say the Name" in many of these spells looks like an addition.

61. This, again, did not originally belong to the preceding rite. The god invoked there was not the sun god, but the creator and ruler of the sun; see 138–61. A number of similarly incompatible spells will be noticed in what follows.

62. The pallium was a cloak affected by persons claiming to be philosophers. The rare word translated "shawl" means "crosswise garment." If this magician were a Jew, it may have been the talith.

63. Or "as an antidote for poisons" or, most likely, both.

64. A spell of unmistakably Jewish background in which, however, the magician identifies himself with Yahweh ("he that sitteth upon the cherubim," 1 Sm 4: 4; 2 Sm 6: 2; etc.) and identifies Helios as an archangel. Compare the use of a Greek prayer, transliterated into Hebrew, for the same purpose, in Sepher Ha-Razim, ed. M. Margalioth (Jerusalem, 1966), pp. 12, 99. The prayer in our text is clearly an interpolation in the list of short (two- or three-line) prescriptions which it interrupts.

65. In these requests it is not clear whether "give" means "specify" (a time suitable for some magical operation) or "add" (to the time of my life).

a day; give an hour; give a month; give a year, lord of life.” Say the Name.

If you want to kill a snake: Say, “Stay, for you are Aphyphs.” And taking a green palm branch and holding its heart,⁶⁶ split it [longways] into two, saying the Name 265 over it 7 times. At once the snake will be split / or will break open.

Prescience: This comes in the rite described above, that with the natron. And [you know] that the god will talk with you as with a fellow god, for I have often performed the rite when you were present.

Invisibility: Also thus: “Come to me, Darkness which appeared in the beginning, and hide me, NN, by the order of him who is self-begotten in heaven.” Say the Name.

270 / Another way: “I call on you alone, the only one in the cosmos who gives orders to gods and men, who changes himself into holy forms and brings existence out of the nonexistent and nonexistence from existent things, holy Thayth,⁶⁷ the true sight of whose face none of the gods can endure to see; make me seem to be, to the eyes 275 of all creatures—a wolf, dog, lion, / fire, tree, vulture, wall, water, or whatever you want—for you are able.” Say the Name.

Resurrection of a dead body: “I conjure you, spirit coming in air, enter, inspire, empower, resurrect by the power / of the eternal god, this body; and let it walk about in this place, for I am he who acts with the power of Thayth, the holy god.”
280 Say the Name.

If you want to cross [the Nile] on a crocodile: Sit down and say, “Hear me, you who live your life in the water. I am one who is at leisure in heaven and goes about 285 in water and in fire and in air / and earth. Return the favor done you on the day when I created you and you made your request to me. You will take me [to] the other side, for I am so-and-so.” Say the Name.

For release from bonds: [[Say, “Hear me, O Christ, in torments; help, in necessities, / O merciful in violent hours, able to do much in the world, who created compulsion and punishment and torture.” Say it 12 times by day,⁶⁸ hissing thrice eight times.]] Say the whole name of Helios beginning from ACHEBYKRÖM.⁶⁹

295 “Let every bond be loosed, every force fail, let all iron be broken, every rope or every strap, let every / knot, every chain be opened, and let no one compel me, for I am”—say the Name.

To quench fire: “Hear, fire, a work of the works of god’s invention, glory of the honored luminary, be quenched, become snow, for the speaker himself is Aion who 300 puts on fire as if it were / asbestos. Let every flame be scattered from me, every physical power, by command of Him who exists forever. You shall not touch me, fire; you shall not harm my flesh, for I am”—say the Name.

66. The center of the triangular end of the branch.

67. Thoth, here and below, l. 283.

68. Not “twelve days” (Preisendanz). All these charms are for quick results, and in this case they were particularly wanted. The words in double brackets are a Christian interpolation as can be seen by the fact that it creates a doublet—a double recipe for a single purpose—and also by comparing form and content of this spell with those of the others in this series, which consistently contain just the elements left in this when the bracketed words are deleted. The interpolation is interesting as evidence that these pagan magical texts continued to be used by the newly Christian criminal class. It also makes conspicuous the absence of Christian elements from the rest of the text. Since the text with the Christian interpolation dates from the first half of the fourth century A.D., the pagan text that was interpolated was probably third century at the latest.

69. This refers to the full name given in ll. 590–92, ACHEBYKRÖN . . . IAÖ. See also ll. 78–79, and cf. ll. 141–47 and 446–53, where the elements of the name are separated by exegetic comments. The magician was to know this name by heart.

For fire to continue: “I conjure you, fire, daimon of holy love, the invisible and manifold, / the one and everywhere, to remain in this lamp at this time, shining and not dying out, by the command of NN.” Say the Name. 305

To send dreams: Make a hippopotamus⁷⁰ of red wax, / hollow, and put into the belly of this hippopotamus both gold and silver and the so-called ballatha⁷¹ of the Jews and array him in white linen and put him in a pure window and, taking a sheet of hieratic papyrus write on it with myrrh ink and baboon’s blood / wherever you wish to send. Then, having rolled it into a wick and using it to light a new, pure lamp, put on the lamp the foot of the hippopotamus and say the Name, and he sends [the specified dream]. 310 315

A philter to be drunk: Take the lion-wasps (?) in a spider’s web / and, when you have ground them [to a powder, sprinkle the powder] on a drink and give it [to the appropriate person] to drink.⁷² 320

If you want your wife⁷³ not to be had by another man: Taking earth and mixing with it ink and myrrh, mold a crocodile, and put it into a lead coffin and write on this the great Name and that of your wife and, “Let NN not cohabit with any other man except me, NN.” The name / to be written on the feet of the image is: BIBIOU OUËR APSABARA KASONNAKA NESEBACH SPHĒ SPHĒ CHPHOURIS. 325

To open doors by use of the Name: “Open, open, 4 quarters of the cosmos, for the lord of the inhabited world comes forth. Archangels, decans, angels rejoice. For Aion of Aion himself, the only and / transcendant, invisible, goes through this place. Open, door! Hear, bar! Fall into two parts, lock! By the name AIA AINRYCHATH, cast up, Earth, for the lord, all things you contain, for he is the storm-sender and controller of the abyss, master of fire. Open, for ACHEBYKRÖM commands you!” [Say ACHEBYKRÖM] 8 times; [it is] the name of Helios. 330

Another way. The spell for Helios: “I am he on the two cherubim, at the middle of the cosmos, between heaven and earth, light and darkness, night and day, rivers and sea. Appear to me, archangel of god, set in authority by the One and Only Himself.” With this spell perform the acts of thanksgiving to Helios, rites to fetch lovers, send dreams, / ask for dreams, make Helios appear, attain goals, win victories, and in short, everything. 335 340

You have now received, child, the sacred and blessed book, Unique, which no one [hitherto] was able to translate⁷⁴ or put into practice. Keep well, child.⁷⁵

*Tr.: Morton Smith. For a more extensive discussion of the composition, see Morton Smith, “The Eighth Book of Moses and How It Grew (PLcid. J 395),” in Atti del XVII Congresso internazionale di papirologia (Napoli: Centro Internazionale per lo studio di papiri ercolanesi, 1984) 683–93. PGM XIII (copied about A.D. 350) consists of two parts, first The Eighth Book of Moses (henceforth VIII Moses), ll. 1–733; second, a collection of miscellaneous spells, divine names, etc., ll. 734–1077.

VIII Moses consists of three parts—three different versions of a rite to get a visit from the supreme god; let us call them A (ll. 1–343), B (ll. 343–645) and C (ll. 646–734). These versions differ considerably by peripheral additions and omissions, but their essential parts are often closely parallel, though not always arranged in the same order. Because of the parallelism, questions raised by two or three have been dealt with only when they first appeared.

70. The word for “hippopotamus” here is uncertain, but written in Greek letters. See also M. J. Raven, “Wax in Egyptian Magic and Symbolism,” OMRM 64 (1983): 7–47, esp. 17–18.

71. Unknown.

72. The expected result is not indicated. Perhaps death, but perhaps love—the wasps had been ensnared and held fast.

73. Reading γυναικά σου instead of Preisendanz’s γυναικας οὐ.

74. More hokum.

75. A standard epistolary cliché. The use of epistolary beginnings and ending for treatises was a common ancient practice.

Hence readers of B and C who encounter difficulties should look for explanations in the notes on the parallel passages in A. Not all parallels are equally close, but those fairly clear are as follows:

Lines:

343–50 = 3–6	410–32 = 42–61	567–608 = 61–90
352–56 = 17–27	432–34 = 227–28	580–81 = 273–74
358 = 100–102	435–40 = 130–35	646–66 = 91–110
361–63 = 128–31	443–550 = 138–209	666–99 = 110–39

345 *The sacred, hidden book of Moses called “eighth” or “holy.”⁷⁶ / This is the ritual using the name that encompasses all things. It also has directions for a meeting with the god in which you will succeed if you leave out nothing [of what is prescribed].

350 Keep yourself pure 41 days, having calculated the day and the hour in which the last appearance of / the old moon will occur in Aries. And when the moon enters Aries sleep on the floor during the previous night, and when you have sacrificed burn also the seven approved kinds of incense⁷⁷ in which the god delights, for the seven censings of the seven stars. The incenses are these: malabathron, styrax, nard, 355 kostos, cassia, frankincense, myrrh. [Take these] and the seven flowers of the seven / stars, which are rose, lotus, narcissus, white lily, crephyllinon, gillyflower, marjoram. Having ground them all to a powder, with wine not mixed with seawater, burn all as incense. And [also] wear cinnamon, for the god has given it magical power. Burn the incenses after the twenty-first day, so as to complete [the preparation?]. 360 As / food take milk of a black cow and wine without seawater and Greek natron ([the author] indicates that is beginning and end).

When the day is at hand, put aside for the sacrifice cypress wood or balsam 365 wood—so that even / without the incenses the sacrifice may give a pleasant odor—and five pinecones full of seed. And light two lamps, each holding about half a pint of oil, on this and that side of the altar. The altar, moreover, is to be made of earth. When you have prepared and filled the lamps, do not later pour any more oil into 370 them. Sacrifice an unblemished⁷⁸ white rooster, / and leave another alive, and similarly [sacrifice one] pigeon [and leave another] so that the god, when he comes in, may take the spirit from whichever he prefers. Also lay out a knife, and lay beside it the seven incenses and the seven flowers prepared [as] written [above] so that if, on 375 coming in, the god should wish to sacrifice again / he may find all in readiness. And leave the sacrifice lying on the altar.

The tasting of the victims is done [in] this way: When you are ready to taste them, sacrifice the rooster, so that [the god] may receive lots of spirit, and at the point of tasting, call on the god of the hour and him of the day, so that you may 380 have sponsorship from them. For if you do not invoke them, / they will not hear you, as being uninitiated. Now you will find [the names of] the gods of the hours and those of the days, and the compulsive formula for each of them in the Key of Moses, for he set them out one by one.⁷⁹

76. The beginning of the second version; see the prefatory note above.

77. Translation dubious. Ἐπιθύμα, usually “incense,” might mean “censing,” which here seems required by the syntax.

78. Or one “without any fleck of color.”

79. Or “brought them out [of secrecy]”? The verb means “pulled away/apart”; this use is unparalleled.

As for the name [of the great god], write all of it on the Greek natron. Instead of / the “pop, pop, pop” sound [in the name] draw on the Greek natron a falcon-formed crocodile,⁸⁰ for he greets the god four times a year at the gods’ true entries of new periods⁸¹—at the cosmos’ first turning, called increase, then in his own elevation which they call “the birth / of Horus,” [[then at the rising of the Dog Star,]]⁸² then at the ascension of Sothis. At each increase of the sun and diminution he gives forth his popping noise. The nine-formed [the Ennead] gives him the power to make the noise at that time, so that the sun may ascend from the sound of water,⁸³ / for he himself appears together with him [the sun]. Therefore he [the falcon-faced crocodile] received the forms and the power of the nine gods that rise with the sun. For at the downward turning [the autumnal equinox] he sends out the sound weaker and less / powerful, [[for this is the birth of cosmos and sun]].⁸⁴
 Then at the “increase” when the lights [of the heavens] begin to rise, he too sends out the noise more powerfully. And at the rise of the Dog Star, turning to the west, he sends out the noise most powerfully,⁸⁵ inasmuch as he does not have the / related water near by, and because this solstice adds more [to his power], while the effects of the last equinox take away what he gained in the preceding solstice. For [the autumn equinox] is [the time of] the Nile flood’s⁸⁶ departure and the sun’s abasement.

Accordingly, draw the two, i.e., the falcon-faced crocodile / and the nine-formed god standing on him, both with myrrhed ink. For the falcon-faced crocodile at the four turnings [of the year] greets the god with his popping noise. For coming up to breathe from the deep he goes “pop, pop, pop,” / and he of the nine forms replies to him antiphonally. Therefore, instead of the “pop, pop, pop” [in the god’s name], draw the falcon-faced crocodile, for the “pop, pop, pop” is the first element of the name. The second is a hissing, and instead of the hissing [draw] a snake biting / its tail. Thus the two elements, popping and hissing, are⁸⁷ [represented by] a falcon-

80. I.e., falcon-faced/headed. See above, l. 4 and n. 15.

81. The reference is to the four solar seasons. The “gods” are the sun and the planets, thought to accompany him. That the beginnings of the seasons are called “new moons” shows how this latter term has been generalized. The “increase” is the sun’s return toward the north after the winter solstice. The falcon-faced crocodile was in part Horus (see above, n. 15); hence his elevation becomes “the birth of Horus,” probably the spring equinox. (Preisendanz’s reference to the winter solstice seems ruled out by the preceding “increase.”) “The birth of Horus” was also a festival celebrated on the twenty-eighth of Pharmuthi (Brugsch, Thesaurus Inscr. Aegypt. 609. 71–72; cf. 370. 14) and in the ideal year, which began with the rising of Sirius/Sothis in July, just after the summer solstice, the twenty-eighth of Pharmuthi would have fallen near March 21, the spring equinox. Such a year actually occurred in Egypt in A.D. 139. Does this date the spell?

82. Omitting, “then (at) the rising of the Dog Star,” a marginal gloss which Preisendanz put in his text. The fourth occasion of greeter, the autumn equinox, is not here specified.

83. The deity is here identified with water, and specifically with the Nile flood. Thus he sends out the popping noise (the sound of water, l. 394) most powerfully at the rise of Sirius/Sothis which begins the inundation in Egypt. At this time the god is said not to have “his kindred water” near him (ll. 404–5), because he has just begun to summon it with his popping. [R.K.R.]

84. This seems an explanatory gloss irreconcilable with the preceding location of “the birth of Horus” (the sun) at the spring equinox. The festival would not have coincided with the autumnal equinox until the end of the sixth century A.D., much too late for this fourth-century papyrus. (Its last previous coincidence was about the end of the eighth century B.C.) Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 52, 372B, reports a festival at “the birthday of the staff of the sun, after the fall equinox, indicating its need . . . of strengthening.” This festival may explain the gloss.

85. Taking δυναμικώτερον as litotes for a superlative (as comparatives, in Greek, often are).

86. The Nile’s flood, beginning after the summer solstice, declines before the autumn equinox.

87. Omitting καί (“and”).

faced crocodile and the nine-formed god standing on it, and around these a snake and the seven vowels.

Now [the god's name] is [composed of] nine names,⁸⁸ in advance of which you should say, with the [prayer on the] stèle, [those of] the gods of the hours / and of the days [and] those set over the weeks, and the compulsive formula for these. For without these the god will not listen, but, thinking you uninitiated, will refuse to receive [you], unless you emphatically say to him the names of the lord of the day and of the hour, / which information you will find at the end [of this tractate]. For without these you can accomplish nothing of the things you find written in the Key.

Then throw [the powder] of the seven flowers, which you have prepared, into the ink, and with this write on the natron. Write the same things on the two sides of the plaque and lick off / the one side and wash off the other into the wine and the milk, first—before you wash it off—having sacrificed the rooster and made everything read.⁸⁹ / Then call on the gods of the hours, as aforesaid, and then drink off [the wine and milk].⁹⁰

“I call on you, you who surround all things, in every language, and in every dialect, I hymn you, / as he first hymned you who was by you appointed and entrusted with all authorities, Helios ACHEBYKRŌM” (which signifies the flame and radiance of the disk) “whose is the glory AAA ĒĒĒ ŌŌŌ, because he was glorified by you” (or, as other [texts read], “was given a glorious form”)—“[you] who set [in their places] the stars / and who, in divine light, create the cosmos, in which you have set in order all things III AAA ŌŌŌ. SABAŌTH ARBATHIAŌ ZAGOURĒ.” (These are the angels who first appeared.) “ARAGA ARATH ADŌNAI BASĒMM IAŌ. The first angel cries to you in birdglyphic, / ‘ARAI’ (which is, ‘Woe to my enemy,’) and you have set him in charge of the punishments. Helios hymns you thus in hieroglyphic, LAILAM, and in Hebrew by his own name, ANAG⁹¹ BIATHIARBAR BERBI SCHI-LATOUR BOUPHROUMTRŌM, / saying, ‘I precede you, lord, I who rise on the boat of the sun, the disk (?), thanks to you. Your magical name in Egyptian is AL-DABAEIM.” (This means the boat, on which he comes up, rising on the world.) “He who appears on the boat rising together with you is a clever / baboon; he greets you in his own language, saying, ‘You are the number of [the days of] the year, ABRASAX.’ The falcon on the other end [of the boat] greets you in his own language and cries out, to receive food, CHI CHI CHI CHI CHI CHI TI TI TI TI TI TI TI. He of the nine forms greets / you in hieratic, ‘MENEPHŌIPHŌTH,’” (meaning that “I go before you, lord”). . . .⁹²

88. The translation is conjectural, but conjecture seems required by the fact that none of the groups of names specified adds up to nine.

89. This contradicts the directions given above, ll. 369–75, and also requires more roosters than provided. Such internal inconcinnities prove version B composite. Most conspicuous is the doubling of the epiphany at the end.

90. Contrast l. 134, where the following petition precedes the drinking. For other discrepancies of detail between B and the other versions, cf. ll. 136, 440–41 (no reference to reclining), 695, and 702–3; and see above, nn. 16 and 28.

91. See above, n. 21, on l. 82. Here we have ANAG, a variant spelling of ANOCH, but equally Egyptian, not Hebrew. Several other variant spellings will occur below and be transcribed without further comment.

92. See above, l. 161. The same hiatus occurs here as in version A. Therefore both B and A were copied from a single source; but they differ considerably, therefore at least one was not copied directly from the source in which the hiatus first occurred. That source must therefore have been at least three literary generations prior to our fourth-century manuscript, and prior to it (by how many generations?) will have been the first copy of the correct text from a descendant of which (presumably) it was taken.

So saying he clapped three times and the god laughed seven times, CHA CHA CHA CHA CHA CHA CHA. When he laughed seven gods were born, who encompass all things. (For these are / those who appeared before [the world was formed].) 475

When he laughed first Phōs-Auge [Light-Radiance] appeared and divided all things, and became god over the cosmos and fire, BESEN BEREITHEN BERIO.

Then he laughed a second time—all was water, and the earth, hearing the / sound and seeing Auge, was amazed and heaved, and the water came to be divided 480 into three parts. And a god appeared and was given charge of the abyss, and therefore without him moisture neither increases nor diminishes. And his name is PROMSACHA ALEEIO. (For you / are ŌEAI BETHE[LLE].) 485

When he wanted to laugh the third time Nous and Phrenes [Mind and Wits] appeared holding a heart, because of the sharpness of the god, and was called Hermes, [since it is he] by whom all things have been interpreted.⁹³ He is also in charge of the power of understanding by which everything is managed. / And he is 490 [called] SEMESILAMPS.

The god laughed the fourth time and Genna [Creative Force]⁹⁴ appeared, controlling Spora [Procreation] of all things, by whom all things were sown, and [this pair] was called BADETOPHŌTH ZŌTHAXATHŌZŌ.

He laughed the fifth time and was gloomy as he laughed, and Moira [Fate] / appeared, holding scales, indicating that justice was in her province. But Hermes 495 contested with her, saying, “Justice is in my province.” While they were fighting the god said to them, “What seems to be just / will depend on both, but all things in 500 the world will be subject to you [Moira].” And she was the first to receive the scepter of the world and was called by a holy name, fearsome and frightful, written first forwards, then backwards, and it is this: THORIOBRITL, etc. [[of whom the name written first forwards, then backwards is great / and holy and glorious, and 505 this is of great value, a powerful name: THORIOBRITITAMMAŌRRAGGADŌ I ŌDAG-GARRŌAMMATITIRBOIROTH—49 letters]].

He laughed the sixth time⁹⁵ and was much gladdened, the Kairos⁹⁶ appeared, holding a scepter, indicating kingship, and he gave over the scepter to / the first- 510 created god, [Phōs, who] receiving it said, “You, wrapping yourself in the glory of Phos [Light] will be with me, because you first gave me a scepter. All things will be subject to you, those that were before and those yet to be. All power will be in you.” When he [Kairos] wrapped himself in the glory of Phos, / the character of the light 515 produced a certain effluence.⁹⁷ The god, [Phōs, then] said to the Queen,⁹⁸ “You, wrapping yourself in the effluence of Phōs, will be with him [Kairos—the sun] compassing all things. You will wax with the light you receive from him, and again you will wane because of him. With you all things will increase and / diminish.” So 520

93. “Interpreted” in Greek seems to come from the same root as “Hermes.”

94. The bracketed words seem a variant and expansion of the preceding text, probably with contamination from version A; cf. ll. 183–86.

95. καιρός (“time”) is here not only time, but the sun god qua measure of time.

96. Here the relation of Kairos as world ruler, to Phōs, the first created god, who subjects all things to him and clothes him with his own glory (cf. Phil 2: 9–11), is remarkably like that of Jesus as Messiah (who is to reign until he puts all enemies under his feet, 1 Cor 15: 23–28) to the first god, the Father. The Christians have transposed the relation a step higher. Jesus himself is Phōs (“Light,” Jn 1: 7–9) and “first born of all creation” (Col 1: 15), and the Father is the creator. However, it seems clear that the same sort of theogonic theorizing underlies both theological structures.

the name is great and marvellous. ANAG BIATHIAR BARBERBI SCHILATOIR BOU-PHROUNTÖRM (36 letters).

He laughed the seventh time, breathing hard, and Psyche [Soul] came into being and all things were moved. So the god said, “You will move all things, and all shall 525 be made glad / so long as Hermes guides you.” When the god said this all things were moved and filled with spirit unrestrainably. The god, seeing this, said, “Pop, pop, pop,” and all things were terrified, and on account of the popping noise Pho-530 bos [Fear] appeared, armed. So he is called DANOUF CHRATÖR / BERBALI BAL-BITHI (26 letters).

Then, looking down at the earth, the god gave a long hiss and the earth was opened, receiving the echo. It gave birth to a creature of its own, the Pythian serpent, who foreknew all things through the utterance of the god. Its name is great 535 and / holy, ILILOUI ILILOUI ILILOUI ITHÖR MARMARAUGĒ PHÖCHÖ PHÖ-BÖCH. When he appeared the earth heaved and was raised much higher, but the celestial pole stayed unmoved, so when they were about to collide the god said 540 “IAÖ,” and everything was fixed in place / and a great, supreme god appeared who established the things that were before in the cosmos and the things yet to be, so that none of the aerial bodies was thenceforth out of place.

Phobos, seeing someone stronger than himself, opposed him, saying, “I am prior 545 to you.” He, however, said, “But I fixed all things [in their places].” So the / [first] god said [to the serpent], “You come from an echo, but this god from an utterance.
Now an utterance is better than an echo. However, [he said to Iao],⁹⁹ “the power of you, who appeared last, will derive from both, so that all things may be fixed in their places.” And he was thenceforth called by the great and marvelous name 550 DANOUF CHRATÖR / BERBALI BALBITH IAÖ. And wishing to give honor also to the one who had assisted him, as having appeared together with him, the first god gave him precedence of the nine gods and possession of power and glory equal to theirs.
555 / And he was called [by a name derived] from the nine gods, as having taken away, along with their power, also the initials of their names, BOSBEADII,¹⁰⁰ and from the seven planets AEËIOYÖ EËIOYÖ EIOYÖ IOYÖ OYÖ YÖ Ö ÖYÖIËEA YOIËEA OIËEA IËEA 560 ËEA EA A— / when written forwards and backwards this is great and marvelous.
But his greatest name, which is this following, is great and holy (of 27 letters)
ABRÖCH BRAÖCH CHRAMMAÖTH PRÖARBATHÖ IAÖ. Another version: ABRÖCH BRAÖCH CHRAMMAÖTH PRÖARBATHÖ IAÖ OY AEËIOYÖ.

565 When, then, the god comes in, / look down and write the things said and whatever name he may give you for himself. And do not go out from under your canopy until he also tells you the things that concern you.

Now the text of the sacred stele to be written in the natron is as follows—and the invocation runs thus, as here given altogether accurately:

570 / “I call on you, the creator of all, who are greater than all, you, the self-begotten god, who see all and hear all and are not seen. For you gave Helios all the glory and 575 the power, / Selene the privilege to wax and wane and have fixed courses, yet you took nothing from the earlier-born darkness, but assigned them equality [with it?].
For when you appeared, both order arose and light appeared, and all things were

99. Since in this version only the serpent was born of an echo, and since the last half of the god's speech must be addressed to Iaö, the change of interlocutor, indicated by the translation, just be conjectured. Presumably the text is corrupt. Cf. the A version, ll. 191–206, which, however, may have been produced by excision of the difficulties. That the more difficult text is apt to be the original is a well-known rule.

Then clap three times, TAK TAK TAK, go “pop, pop, pop” for a long time; hiss a 101. Literally, “Initiate me in/by these my matters.”

102. Sarapis (like Christ above, in ll. 289–92) is elsewhere of no importance in this text. Therefore his name here and in l. 640 below is probably interpolated. However, this does not prove that the whole section in which the name occurs is an interpolation. The section has the ideas and vocabulary of the rest of the text, and understandably follows the visit of the angel as a spell to introduce the magician to the supreme god himself. That no epiphany follows may be due either to the loss of the end of the text that the compiler was using or to his desire to subordinate this to the C version, which now begins immediately, is much abbreviated, and so leads quickly to the final meeting with the god.

103. HARSAMOSI is “Horus the Elder.” [R.K.R.] Other divine names are also embedded in the spell: IAÖ, THOUTHË (probably from Thoth), SEMESILAM.

104. The seven Greek vowels, represented by the first seven letters of this group, were equated with the notes of the musical scale, and so represented the basic harmony.

*Have¹⁰⁷ a tablet on which you will write what he says to you, and a knife so that, clean from all [impurities], you may kill the sacrifices, and a libation, that you may 650 pour one. Have all these / ready nearby you. And you be in clean linens, crowned with an olive wreath. Prepare the canopy thus: taking a clean sheet write on the 655 border [the names of] the 365 gods. Make it like a tent / under which you go to be initiated. Also have cinnamon at your neck, for the deity is pleased by it and gave it power. And have also the Apollo who will help you, carved from a root of laurel, 660 / with tripod standing beside him and Pythian serpent. Carve around the Apollo the great name in Egyptian form: on his chest this,¹⁰⁸ BAINCHŌŌCHŌŌŌCHNIAB, MARMARAUGĒ PHŌCHŌ PHŌBŌCH. Have this, too, around your neck when you 670 perform the initiation; / it is helpful in everything, along with the cinnamon.

Accordingly, as I said before, when you have purified yourself in advance [through the last] seven days while the moon is waning, at the dark of the moon begin sleeping on the ground. Rising at dawn, greet the sun [Helios] through seven days, each 675 day saying first the [names of the] / gods of the hours, then those set over the weeks. Also [each day], learning who is the ruler of that day, keep after him, saying, “Lord, on such-and-such a day I am calling the god to the sacred sacrifices”—doing so until the eighth day.

Then, / coming to this day, in the middle of the night, when there is quiet, light the altar fire and have at hand the two roosters and the two lamps, lighted, into 685 which you must not put any more oil. Now begin to recite the stele and the / mystery of the god. Have standing by a mixing bowl containing milk of a black cow and wine not mixed with seawater, for this is beginning and end. Then having written on one side of the natron [plaque, the text of] the stele which begins “I call on you, 690 who are greater than all,” / etc., as given above, lick it off, and pouring [wine?] on the other side, on which is the figure drawing,¹⁰⁹ wash it off into the mixing bowl.
The natron should be written [with ink made] both from the incense materials and petition and having said it lie down on the mat, holding the tablet and the stylus,

Now when the god comes in do not stare / at his face, but look at his feet while beseeching him, as written above, and giving thanks that he did not treat you contemptuously, but you were thought worthy of the things about to be said to you for correction of your life. You, then, ask, “Master, what is fated for me?” And he will tell you even / about your star, and what kind of daimon you have, and your horoscope and where you may live and where you will die. And if you hear something bad, do not cry out or weep, but ask that he may wash it off or circumvent it, for this god can do everything. Therefore, when you begin questioning, / thank him for having heard you and not overlooked you. Always sacrifice to this [god] in this way and offer your pious devotions, for thus he will hear you.

The technique of determining which god is ruler of the celestial pole [at a given time,] goes as follows: Find out, child, to which god the day is subject in the Greek reckoning, / and then, coming to the “Seven-Zoned,” count from the bottom up, and you will find the answer. For if the day be subject to Helios in the Greek reckoning, Selene rules the pole, and thus the rest, as follows:

Greek		The Seven-Zoned

Selene	Moses,	Zeus

110. As often in ancient manuscripts, the title follows the text. Perhaps it did so in l. 344 and was there fused with the beginning title of version B.

111. Reading “or” for Preisendanz’s “which” (ἥ for ἡ). Evidently the copyist knew at least three manuscripts.

112. An “ogdoad” is something composed of eight members or elements. Capitalized, the term is used especially for a set of eight Egyptian gods, considered as a unit. They consisted of four pairs, representing the masculine and feminine aspects of the primeval world (Bonnet, RARG 5–6, s.v. “Achtteir”; cf. the similar “Ennead” discussed in n. 15 above). [R.K.R. adds that they were celebrated in the creation myth of Hermopolis—in Egyptian, “Eight-Town”—as those who brought forth the universe. He refers

There are also prefaced four other names, that of nine letters and that of fourteen letters and that of twenty-six letters and that of Zeus. You may use these on boy-750 mediums who do not see the gods, so / that one will see unavoidably, and for all spells and needs: inquiries, prophecies by Helios, prophecies by visions in mirrors. And for the compulsive spell you should use the great name which is Ogdoas, the god who directs all things throughout the creation. [For] without him simply 755 nothing / will be accomplished. Learn and conceal, child, the name [composed] of the nine letters, AEĒ EĒI OYŌ, and that of the fourteen letters, YSAU SIAUE IAŌUS, and that of the twenty-six letters, ARABBAOUARABA (to be written forwards and backwards),¹¹³ the name of Zeus, CHONAI IEMOI CHO ENI KA ABIA SKIBA PHOROUOM EPIERTHAT.

760 / Here is the instruction [for recitation] of the heptagram,¹¹⁴ and the spell to which the god gives attention: (The spell):

to Morenz, Egyptian Religion 175–77.] As gods who produced the cosmos, like those of Hesiod’s Theogony, they interested Greeks who speculated about cosmology. Since the precosmic world was that of divine perfection, they came to be thought both a heaven above the seven planetary heavens, and a deity above the cosmic gods. Greek speculation about a divine sphere beyond those of the planets was happy to find in them an ancient, arcane, and prestigious prototype. Hence their name became a popular term in second-century A.D. and later theosophy; it figures in Hermetic, Neoplatonic, and Christian writings, both “orthodox” and “gnostic,” and reflections are found even in rabbinic literature. Such popularity accounts for this postscript, adding the fashionable Egyptian name to the preceding collection, which had lacked it. Perhaps the collection was made before the name became truly popular.

117. This list of divine gifts (while admittedly at home in most cultures) is quite Egyptian in its emphasis on “good old age” and “good burial.” Cf. the standard prayer, “that he be buried in the necropolis of the desert in good old age,” K. Sethe, Urkunden des alten Reiches (Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1933), vol. I, p. 120, and many parallels. [R.K.R.]

Detailed textual analysis is impossible here, but it seems clear that different sources have been used, and likely, that different writers used them.

12. The griffin is described by the author of the Demotic tale called "The Myth of the Sun's Eye" in the following terms (15. 1–4): His beak is (that of) an eagle; his eyes are (those of) a man; his limbs are (those of) a lion; his scaly ears are (those of) an 3b3h fish of the sea; his tail is (that of) a snake—the five [creatures] which breathe which are upon (the earth). The griffin is described as the "avenger upon whom no avenger can wreak vengeance" and the "herdsman of everything which is upon earth." The most recent discussion of this passage, and its translation into Greek, is by J. W. Tait, "A Duplicate Version of the Demotic Kufi Text," Acta Orientalia 36 (1974): 23–27, and "The Fable of Sight and Hearing in the Demotic Kufi Text," Acta Orientalia 37 (1976): 27–44.

47. I.e., of the gods seated at the table, as noted by Griffith and Thompson, The Leyden Papyrus 32, n. to l. III. 2.

48. I.e., the youth.

49. I.e., Anubis.

You should cause him to say to Anubis, “The god who will inquire for me today, let him tell me his name.” When he stands up and tells his name, you should ask him concerning everything which you wish.

Its preparation:⁵⁰ You bring seven new bricks which have not yet been moved in order to turn them (over) to the other face. You should lift them, you being pure, without touching them against anything on earth, and you should set them back in the[ir] manner in which they were set. You should set three bricks under the oil. The other four bricks, you should arrange them around the youth without / his body touching the ground. Or seven palm staffs—you should treat them in this fashion also. You should bring seven clean loaves [of bread] and arrange them around the oil, together with seven lumps of salt. You should bring a new bowl and fill it with clean oasis oil. You should put [it in] to the dish gradually without producing cloudiness so that it becomes exceedingly clear. You should bring a pure youth who has not yet gone with a woman; you should speak down into his head beforehand, he standing up, (to learn) whether he would be useful in going to the vessel. If he will be useful, you should make him lie down on his belly / and cover him with a clean linen cloth (you should recite down into his head),⁵¹ there being a strap on the upper part of the cloth. You should recite this invocation which is above down into his head, he gazing downwards looking into the oil, up to seven times, his eyes being closed. When you have finished, you should make him open his eyes, and you should ask him about what you desire. You do it until the time of the seventh hour of the day.

The invocation which you should recite (them [sic]) down into his head beforehand to test him in his ears to learn whether he would be useful in going to the vessel. Formula: “Noble ibis, falcon, / hawk, noble and very mighty, let me be purified in the manner of the noble ibis, falcon, hawk, noble and very mighty.” You should recite this down into his head up to seven times.

[III, 18]

When you announce this, his ears speak. If his two ears speak, he is very good; if it is his right ear, he is good; if it is the left (ear), he is bad.

Prescription for enchanting the vessel quickly so that the gods come in and tell you an answer truthfully:⁵² You should put the shell of a crocodile’s egg, or that which is inside it, on the flame. It enchants instantly.

Prescription to make them speak: You put a frog’s head on the brazier. They speak.

Prescription for bringing the gods in by force: You should put bile / of a crocodile and ground myrrh on the brazier.

[III, 23]

If you wish to make them come in quickly, again: You should put stalks of anise on the brazier together with the eggshell, above. It enchants at once.

If you wish to bring in a living man: You should put “sulphate” of copper on the brazier. He comes in.

If you wish to bring in a spirit: You should put s3-nr stone⁵³ and glass(?) stone⁵⁴ on the brazier. The spirit comes in. You should put the heart of a hyena or a hare; (it is) very good.

If you wish to bring in a drowned man: You should put sea-garab (stone?) on the brazier.

50. Literally, “gathering of things.” [R.K.R.]

51. Repeated, out of place, from PDM xiv. 68.

52. See n. 30 above.

53. Perhaps σάπυ; see Harris, Minerals 179–80.

54. Ibid., 99–100.

If you wish to bring in a dead man: You should put ass's dung⁵⁵ and an amulet of Nephthys on the brazier. He comes in.

85 If you / wish to send them all away: You should put ape's dung on the brazier.
[III, 28] They all go away to their place. And you should recite their spell for dismissing them also.⁵⁶

If you wish to bring in a thief: You should put crocus powder and alum on the brazier.

The spells which you should recite when you dismiss them to their place: "Go well, go in joy!"

If you wish to make the gods come in to you and (to make) the vessel enchant quickly: You should bring a scarab and drown it in the milk of a black cow and put it on the brazier. It enchants in the moment named and the light comes into being.

90 / An amulet to be bound to the body of the one who is carrying the vessel, to [III, 34] cause it to enchant quickly: You should bring a band of linen of sixteen threads, four of white, four of [green], four of blue, four of red, and make them into one band and stain them with the blood of a hoopoe. You should bind it to a scarab in its attitude of the sun god,⁵⁷ drowned,⁵⁸ being wrapped in byssus. You should bind it to the body of the youth who is carrying the vessel. It enchants quickly, there [being nothing in the world better ?] than it (?).

You should bring them while they are fresh; you should put them in a glass bowl; you should seal its mouth with clay very well for twenty days in a hidden, dark place. After twenty days, if you bring it up and open it, you find some testicles in it together with a phallus. If you leave it for forty days and bring it up and open it, you find that it has already become bloody. In a place which is hidden at all times, you put it in a glass object, and you put the glass object into a pottery object. / If you desire to make a “god’s arrival”⁹⁶ of the lamp with it at any time, you should fill your eye(s) with this aforementioned blood while you are going in to recite the spell to the lamp. 88. This magical name is determined with the “man”-determinative rather than the “divine”-determinative normally found with the magical names. It is probably Greek πατήρ, “father.” The preceding may consist of this Greek word plus the Egyptian first-person singular suffix pronoun y, “my.” The following word, written alphabetically, corresponds to the Coptic for “in/of heaven” (n p.t). Thus these glosses may well mean “my father, my father, father in (the) heaven of the heaven(s).” (For the analysis of the repeat of the last word, cf. PDM xiv. 126, as noted by R.K.R.)

89. The last word of this name is probably the Egyptian word “male.” The first word, which is repeated, might be the word “son” or the verb “to be satisfied.” In PDM xiv. 202 it is written as the verb “to be satisfied.”

90. “Also called” is inserted above the end of the line and the Old Coptic gloss ARMIOOUTH is added in the left margin.

91. The Old Coptic gloss gives “of KABAON”; in PDM xiv. 204 the scribe changed Demotic ḫwgy into ḫ3ḫ3wn.

92. The Old Coptic gloss adds TAKRTAT after XABA|H|O.

93. Literally, “let my eyes open out”; the idiom ti-wn tr.t, “to cause that (the) eye(s) open” means “to instruct.” See Ritner above, n. 68.

94. Or is this sign the determinative (used with foreign words) of the preceding word, which ends in ḫ?

95. Literally, “eye-of-raven” plant.

 lamp, it being lit, opposite the sun; you recite the spells which are below⁹⁸ to it four times; you take it into the room, you being pure, together with the youth; you recite the spells to the youth⁹⁹ while he is not looking at the lamp, his eye(s) being closed, seven times. You should put pure frankincense on the brazier while you are [VI, 6] finished, you make him open his eye(s) toward the lamp: he sees the shadow of the god near the lamp, and he inquires for you concerning that which you desire. At midday in a place without light you do it.

If you are inquiring for a demonic spirit, a wick of sailcloth is what you should give to the lamp, and you should fill it with clean butter.

If it is another matter, a clean wick and pure genuine oil are what you should give to the lamp.

If you will do it to bring a woman to a man, oil of roses¹⁰⁰ is what you should put

I am the soul of the great chief¹¹¹ who is in Abydos; I am the guardian of the great corpse¹¹² which is in Wu-poke.¹¹³ I am he whose eye(s) are the eye(s) of a falcon watching over Osiris by night; I am 'He who is upon his mountain'¹¹⁴ upon the necropolis of Abydos; I am he that watches over the great corpse which is in Busiris,¹¹⁵ I am he who watches for R-Khepri-Atum¹¹⁶ / whose name is hidden in my heart. 'Soul of souls' is his name" (formula: seven times).

[In margin]: The writings which you should write on the lamp: "BAXYXSIXYX" (174a-176a)

If it is a “god’s arrival,”¹¹⁸ these things alone are what you should recite.

If an inquiry by the youth is what you will do, you should recite these aforesaid to the lamp before you have recited¹¹⁹ down into the head of the youth. You should turn around,¹²⁰ and you should recite this other invocation to the lamp also. Formula: "O Osiris, O lamp, it will cause [me] to see those above,¹²¹ it will cause [me] to see those below, and vice versa. O lamp, O lamp, Amoun is moored in you. O lamp, O lamp, I call to you while you are going up upon the great sea, the sea of Syria, the sea of Osiris.¹²² Am I speaking / to you? 142. See n. 141 above.

143. See n. 89 above. Here the scribe has added the Old Coptic gloss AXREMTO above the beginning of the next line (i.e., over the Demotic “come!”).

144. Literally, “cause that my eyes open out”; see n. 93 above.

145. Modified by the Demotic scribe from ATYGI; see Griffith and Thompson, The Leyden Papyrus, n. to column VII of the autograph volume.

146. Old Coptic gloss adds TAKARTAT after CHABAHO; cf. PDM xiv. 138 and n. 92 there.

147. See n. 122 above.

148. The end is written in Demotic as “of Pre,” perhaps “soul of Pre.”

149. NTER is the Old Coptic gloss; the Demotic writes ntr.w, “gods.”

150. See n. 30 above (nt for d before i).

151. The last section shows a metathesis in the Demotic (apparently for graphic reasons) of the common ORTHO found in the gloss. See also n. 8 above (nt for d).

152. Written in Demotic as m, “brother.”

153. See n. 8 above.

154. AKRYROBORE is Greek ἀκρορροβόρε (LSJ, s.v.: “swallowing the tip of her tail”). See also PGM I. 146 and the Glossary s.v. “YESSIMMIGADON formula.” [H.D.B.]

164. Written with the Egyptian verb im, “to come.”

165. Although with animal determinative rather than phallus.

166. Or, if we do not believe the determinative on q3, “day of (the) bull.”

167. Overlap with the end of the preceding column. Note that, as Griffith and Thompson remark, The Leyden Papyrus 62, n. to l. VIII. 1, this heading is simply a reminder of the subject matter and is not a new heading; it is put in the middle of the column, not flush with the right margin.

168. See n. 107 above.

169. Ending written as hr, “praise.”

170. The Demotic uses the verb im, “to come.”

171. See n. 170 above.

172. Perhaps “lifetime maker.” [R.K.R.]

173. R.K.R. suggests translating “I shall induct (?)”

174. See n. 107 above.

175. Written with the Egyptian verb hpr “to be, become,” Coptic šope; the middle example has an added final e.

176. With scated man determinative; the Old Coptic gloss reads ABRAHAM.

177. The wd3.t-eye of Horus.

178. “Creator (or creation) of the mouth.”

179. “Soul of darkness, son of darkness.” See n. 76 above.

180. See n. 62 above.

181. A town in Middle Egypt; see Gardiner, Onomastica II, 77*, #374. As Griffith and Thompson, The Leyden Papyrus 64, n. to l. VIII. 12, there is no determinative to show that Paysakh is a personal name, but it is hard to suggest an alternative interpretation.

182. Although SHY is written phonetically in the Demotic, this may well be the Egyptian god Shu, the god of the air. The first element of the name is written with the Egyptian word r, “mouth,” and the whole name could possibly mean “mouth of Shu.” If this is the god Shu, the r of PSHOU is the definite article, which is also found with r “the sun (god)” in the late form Pre.

183. A lion-headed goddess worshiped especially in Middle Egypt; see Griffith and Thompson, The Leyden Papyrus 65, n. to l. VIII. 14.

184. Restoring ind.

185. Nfr-htp means “beautiful of setting” (of the sun and moon). Khonsu (son of Amoun and Mur and preeminently a Theban god) is a moon god, here identified with Horus (also a moon god) in the form of the “noble child who came forth from the lotus,” i.e., Nfr-htp; see R.K.R.’s note to PGM IV. 1110.

186. The moon regulating the days of the month, as Griffith and Thompson, The Leyden Papyrus 66, n. to l. IX. 2.

187. The color of the moon, as noted by Griffith and Thompson, The Leyden Papyrus 66, n. to l. IX. 2.

188. As suggested by Griffith and Thompson, ibid.

189. Amoun, who in the late period was considered the god of Meroc; cf. l. 1097 and see Griffith and Thompson, ibid.

190. Or does this involve the verb hm “to command,” “to entrust”? Then the rendering would be “to whom is commanded” (hm.w n.f). [R.K.R.]

191. Perhaps “the great one of/among the great one(s).” [R.K.R.]

192. The wḏ3 t-eye, the sound-eye of Horus. See Bonnet, RARG 854–56, s.v. “Uzatauge.”

193. The identical epithets occur below, PDM xiv. 250–51. The word hm which is to be restored here means literally “vessel.” The plural means “things” and the Coptic derivative means not only “vessel” or “pot” but any material “thing.” Griffith and Thompson translate “boundaries” in 241 and 250 and “cycle” in 246. R.K.R. suggests that the idea of “four eternal things” is an Egyptian rendering of the Greek concept of the four elements.

“I know your name, I know your form, I [know] your manner. ‘Great’ is your name; ‘Heir’ is your name; ‘Beneficial’ is your name; ‘Hidden’ is your name; ‘Great one of the gods’ is your name; ‘He whose name is hidden from all the gods’¹⁹⁴ is your name; ‘OM, Great One, Am is your name; ‘All the gods’ is your name; ‘Lotus Lion Ram’¹⁹⁵ is your name; ‘LOY is coming, Lord of the lands’ ‘Lord of the lands’ is your name; ‘AMAKHR of heaven’ is your name; ‘Lotus flower of stars (?) / is coming EI IO NE EI O’ is your name.

 [X, 7] gods, whose names I have uttered here today, awaken for me, awaken for me the drowned, the [dead]! Let your souls and your [secret] forms live for me at the mouths of my lamp, my bandage, my word-gathering. Let it answer me concerning every word [about] which I am asking here today in truth, truly, without falsehood therein. Hasten, hasten, quickly, quickly!”

Its preparation: ²³³ You go to a dark storeroom whose [face] opens to the south or east in a clean place. You should spread it with clean sand brought from the great river ²³⁴ You should bring a clean copper beaker or a new vessel [made] of pottery; you should put a lok-measure of water that has settled or of pure water into the 285 beaker together with a lok-measure of pure real oil, / or oil alone without putting [X, 12] water into it; you should put a qs-nh stone ²³⁵ in the vessel with the oil; you should put a “heart-of-the-good-house” plant ²³⁶ in the bottom of the vessel; you should put three new bricks around the vessel; you should place seven clean loaves [of bread] on the bricks which are around the vessel; and you should bring a pure youth who has been tested in his ears beforehand (that is, he will be profitable in going with the vessel). You should make him sit on a new [brick]; you yourself should sit on another brick, you being before him (another [manuscript] says, behind him); you should put your hand up to [his] eye(s), [his eye(s) being] closed 290 while you recite down / into the middle of his head seven times. When you have [X, 17] finished, you should lift your hand from before his eye(s), you should [make him bend over] the vessel and you should put your hands to his ears. You should take hold of them with your own hands while you ask the child saying, “Did you [see the great god]?”

If he says, “I see a darkness,” you should say to him “Speak, saying, ‘I see your beautiful face, . . . you . . . O great god Anubis!’”

If you wish to do it by vessel [you being] alone, ²³⁷ you should fill your eye(s) with this ointment ²³⁸ and you should sit [near the vessel?] in accordance with what is above, your eyes being closed. You should recite the above invocation seven times, open your eye(s), and question him concerning everything [that you wish]. . . . You

307. Written in cipher; reading and meaning uncertain. Griffith and Thompson read TOYR and translated "to be troublesome." It might read DOYR, in which case could it mean "to be srrong" (ḏr) or "to scatter, disperse" (ḏr)? Depending on the meaning of this verb, the preceding subject might be "he" (the man) rather than "it" (the animal).

308. See PDM xiv. 381.

309. The verb ḏrp, which is what appears to have been written, means "to stumble" or, transitively, "to trip (someone), to hinder, to impede."

310. A reference to Prah, the craftsman god of Memphis.

311. Personification of high numbers and everlastingness.

312. Or a phonetic spelling of the name Heh, written in hieratic.

313. See n. 177 above.

314. With flesh determinative; cf., perhaps, μάστιξ, "whip."

315. Arianus, written with seated man determinative.

316. The Old Coptic gloss adds another KSON.

317. A crown worn by the king and Osiris.

318. Perhaps "he of the primeval waters (Nun)."

you should press them together; you should put them in a cup of wine; you should add three ladles to it of the first fruits of the wine, before you have tasted it and before an offering has been poured out from it; you should recite this spell³⁴⁴ to it 435 seven times; you should make the woman drink it; you should tie the skin of the tick aforesaid with a band of byssus; / and you should tie it to your left arm.

338. I.e., without a youth.

339. PDM xiv. 415–16.

340. Thus Griffith and Thompson, The Leyden Papyrus; see pp. 103–4, n. to XIV. 32. The identification has been questioned by D. Devauchelle and M. Pezin, “Un papyrus médical démotique,” CEg 53 (1978): 59. H. von Deines and H. Grapow (Wörterbuch der Ägyptischen Drogennamen, Grundriss der Medizin der Alten Ägypter, vol. 6 [Berlin: Akademie-Verlag, 1959], 39–41) identified this plant as “mentha aquatica.”

341. The identification of hr̄m̄t̄ of PDM xiv. 430 with syb of PDM xiv. 434 indicates the meaning “tick,” as Crum, Coptic Dictionary, 318b–319a.

[XV, 18]

Another method [of doing it] again: The fragment³⁴⁹ of the tip of your fingernail and apple seed together with blood from your aforesaid finger also. You should pound the apple, you should add blood to it, you should put it in the cup of wine; / you should recite³⁵⁰ it seven times, and you should make the woman drink it at the above-mentioned time.

Its invocation in Egyptian³⁵² again is this which is below:

“Do not run after me, NN.³⁵³ I am PAPIPTY METYBANES, carrying the mummy of Osiris, going to take it to Abydos to let it rest in Alkhah. If NN fights with me today, I shall cast it out.” (Say seven times!)

352. Note the bilingual abilities of the scribe. The text is Egyptian in theme (the burial of Osiris) and the Greek text even includes one sentence in Egyptian. This indicates the Egyptian origin of the whole, despite the placement of the Greek version before the Egyptian one. [R.K.R.]

353. Feminine or, possibly, plural.

The invocation which you should recite before Pre early in the morning before you have recited to the youth, in order that that which you will do will come about:

motic Magical Papyrus*, recto, col. XVI/1–17. Words preceded by ˆ are written in the text in

PDM xiv. 475–88

* Another manner of [doing] it also: You should rise at dawn from your bed, early in the day on which you will do it, or any day, in order that everything which you will do will be exact through your agency, ³⁶² you being pure from all evil. You should recite this spell before Pre three times or seven times: “TO TA-BAO SOKHAM-MYA

[col. XVI, 22] ALYAPOKHRI, let everything / that I shall undertake here today, let it happen.”

Its manner: You bring a new lamp in which no red lead ³⁶⁵ has been put; you [put] a clean wick in it; you fill it with pure genuine oil; you put it in a hidden place cleansed with natron water; you lay it on a new brick; you bring a youth; you seat him on another new brick, his face being turned to the lamp; you close his eyes; and you recite these [words] above, ³⁶⁶ down into the youth's head, seven times. You should make him open his eyes while you say to him, “Do you see the light?” If he says to you, “I see the light in the flame of the lamp,” you should cry out at that 485 moment saying / “HEYE” nine times. You should ask him about everything you [XVI, 27] wish after reciting the invocation which you did previously before Pre early in the morning. ³⁶⁷ You do it in a place whose door opens to the east; you leave the face of the lamp turned . . . ; and you leave the youth's faced turned . . . ³⁶⁸ facing the lamp, you being on his left. You should recite down into his head, while you touch his head with your second finger of the . . . of your right hand.

He reveals himself to the youth in the moment named. You recite these things down into the head of the boy, while he is looking / at the lamp. Do not let him look at another place except only the lamp. If he does not look at it, he is afraid. You should do all these [things]. When you finish your inquiry, you should turn around, you should have him close his eyes, and you should say down into his head this other invocation, below, that is, if the gods go away³⁷⁸ and the youth ceases to see them: "Beginning KHEM-PHE, Zeus, Sun³⁷⁹ SATRA-PERMET, watch over this youth! Do not let him be frightened, terrified, or afraid, and make him return to his original path! Open, O Underworld! Be great, be great, O light! O that which is outside, come in!” You should say it nine times until the light is great and Anubis comes in.

When Anubis has come in and established himself, you should say to Anubis, “Arise! Go out and bring in to me the gods of this city or town.” He goes out at that moment and brings the gods in. When you know / that the gods have come in, you should say to Anubis, “Bring in a table for the gods so that they may sit down!” When they are seated, you say to Anubis, ⁴⁰⁴“Bring in a wine jar and some bread! Let them eat, let them drink.” When he has had them eat and drink, you should say to Anubis, “Are they going to inquire for me today?” If he says they [are] again, you 555 * [Spell] to be said to the bite of the dog: / “My mouth being full of blood of a [col. XIX, 2] black dog, I spitting out the redness⁴⁰⁶ of a dog, I come forth from Alkhah.⁴⁰⁷ O this dog who is among the ten dogs which belong to Anubis, the son of his body, extract your venom, remove your saliva from me also! If you do not extract your venom and remove your saliva, I shall take you up to the forecourt of [the temple 560 of] Osiris, my watchtower (?). I will do for you⁴⁰⁸ . . . / according to the voice of [XIX, 7] Isis, the magician, the lady of magic, who bewitches everything, who is never bewitched in her name of Isis, the magician.”

You [should] pound garlic with gum (?), put it on the wound of the dog bite, and speak to it daily until it is well.

595 * [Spell] to be said to the sting.⁴³⁵ / “I am the King’s son, greatest and first, Anubis.
[col. XX, My mother Sekhmet-Isis comes⁴³⁶ after me all the way to the land of Syria, to the 2] hill of the land of Heh,⁴³⁷ to the nome of these cannibals, saying, ‘Hurry, hurry! Quickly, quickly, my child, King’s son, greatest and first, Anubis,’ saying, ‘Arise and come to Egypt, for your father Osiris is King of Egypt; he is ruler over the whole land; all the gods of Egypt are assembled to receive the crown from his hand.’

600 / “At the moment of saying these [things] she jumped⁴³⁸ at me. My strength fell [XX, 7] from me. She coiled⁴³⁹ and she came to me with a sting; I sat down and I wept. Isis, my mother, sat near me, saying to me, ‘Do not weep, do not weep, my child, King’s son, greatest and first, Anubis! Lick from your tongue to your heart, and vice versa, as far as the edges of the wound! Lick from the edges of the wound up to the limits of your / strength!’ What you will lick up, you should swallow it. Do not spit it out 605 on the ground, for your tongue is the tongue of the Agathodaimon,⁴⁴⁰ your tongue is that of Arum!”

You should lick it with your tongue while it is bleeding. Immediately afterwards, you should speak to a little oil and you should speak⁴⁴¹ to it seven times while putting it on the sting daily. You should dye a strip of linen and put it on it.

610 / [The spell] which you should say to the oil to put it on the sting daily: “Isis sat [XX, 17] speaking to the oil, ABARTAT, and lamenting to the true oil, saying, ‘You are praised. I am going to praise you, O oil; I am going to praise you. By the Agathodaimon you are praised. By me myself you are honored. I am going to praise you forever, O oil, O vegetable oil’” (another [manuscript] says “true oil”), “O sweat of the 615 Agathodaimon, amulet of Geb. Isis is the one who / is speaking to the oil. O true [XX, 22] oil, O drop of rain, O water-drawing of the planet Jupiter⁴⁴² which comes down from the sun bark at dawn, you should do the good [deeds] of the dew of dawn which heaven cast to the ground upon every tree. You should heal the limb which is paralyzed and you should act as remedy for him who lives, for I shall employ you for the sting of the King’s son, greatest and first, Anubis, my child, in order that you fill it and make it well. For I shall employ you for [the] sting of NN, whom NN bore, / in order that you fill it and make it well”” (seven times).

PDM xiv. 636–69

*[The method] of the scarab in the cup of wine in order to make a woman love a man: You should bring a scarab of Mars⁴⁵⁷ (which is this small scarab which has no horn), it having three shields on the front of its head—you find its face shrunken—or also the one which has two horns.⁴⁵⁸ You should bring it at the rising of the sun; you should bind yourself with a cloth on the upper part of your back; you should bind yourself at your face with a strip of palm fiber while the scarab is on the palm⁴⁵⁹ of your hand; and you should speak⁴⁶⁰ to it before the sun when it is about to rise, seven times. When you have finished, you should drown it in milk of a black cow. You should put a [unit of ?] 10⁴⁶¹ (pieces) of olive wood to its head. You 640 should leave it until evening in the milk. When evening comes, you should / bring [col. XXI, it up, you should spread under it with sand, and you should put a band of cloth 14] under it upon the sand, for four days. You should put myrrh on a flame before it.

When the four days have passed, and it is dry, you should bring it before you, a cloth being spread under it. You should divide it in its middle with a copper knife. You should take its right half and nail parings of your right hand and foot, and you should cook them on a new potsherd with vine wood. You should pound them with nine apple seeds and your urine or your sweat free from bath oil; you should make it into a ball; you should put it in the wine; you should speak⁴⁶² over it seven times; you should make the woman drink it; you should take its other half, the left one, together with the nail parings of your left hand and foot also; you should bind them in a strip of byssus with myrrh and saffron; you should bind them to your left arm; and you should lie with the woman while they are bound to you.

645 / If you wish to do it also without drowning it, you do it also on the third of the [XXI, 19] lunar month, you doing this manner above for it also. You should recite its invocation to it before the sun at dawn; you should cook [it]; you should divide it; you should do it according to that which is above also in everything.

[The invocation] which you should recite to it before the sun at dawn: “You are the scarab of real lapis-lazuli. Bring yourself out of the door of my temple! You should lift (?) a copper vessel (?) to your nose, [O he] who knew how to eat the herbage, who tramples the field plants (?), who damages the great cult images of those of Egypt, I sending you against NN whom NN bore, to strike her from her heart to her belly, from her belly to her intestines, from her intestines to her womb, for she is the one who urinated before the sun at dawn, saying to the sun, ‘Do not come forth!’; to the moon, ‘Do not rise!’; to the water, ‘Do not come to those of Egypt!’; to the field, ‘Do not bloom!’; and to the great trees of those of Egypt, ‘Do 650 not grow green!’ / I sending you to NN, whom NN bore, in order to beat her from [XXI, 24] her heart to her belly, from her belly to her intestines, from her intestines to her womb, so that she put herself on the road following after NN, whom NN bore, at all times.”

[The spell] which you should recite to it while it is in the milk: “Woe, doubly great one; woe, my doubly great one; woe, his (?) Nun.⁴⁶³ woe, his love, O scarab, O scarab, you are the eye of Pre, the little finger⁴⁶⁴ of Osiris, the fingers of Shu.⁴⁶⁵ You should go in this form⁴⁶⁶ in which Osiris your father went, on account of NN, whom NN bore, until fire is put after her heart, the flame after her flesh, until she goes to NN, whom NN bore, at every place in which he is.”

[The spell] which you should recite to it while you are cooking it: “Hail, my beautiful child, the youth of oil-eating (?), who cast semen and who casts semen among all the gods, this one whom the small one and the great one found among the two great enneads on the east of Egypt, / while he was coming forth as a black scarab on a stem of papyrus reed! I know your name; I know your craft⁴⁶⁷ (?). ‘The work of two stars’ is your name. I am casting fury against you today, NPHALAM BALLABALKHA IOPHPHE, in order that every burning, every heat, every fire in which you are today, you will make them in the heart, the lungs, the liver, the spleen, the womb, the large intestine, the small intestine, the ribs, the flesh, the bones, in every limb, in the skin of NN, whom NN bore, until she goes to NN, whom NN bore, at every place in which he is.”

[The spell] which you should recite to it in the wine:

“O scarab, O scarab, you are the scarab of real lapis-lazuli; you are the eye of Pre; you are the eye of Atum, the finger of Shu, the little finger of Osiris. You are the black bull, the foremost one, who came forth from Nun, / the beauty of Isis being with you. You are RAKS RAPARAKS, the blood of this wild boar which they brought from the land of Syria to Egypt.”

From outside to the wine: “I shall send you. Will you go on my business? Will you do it? May you say, ‘Send me to the thirsty so that his thirst may be quenched, to the canal that it may be dried up, to the sand of the . . . that it may be scattered without wind, to the papyrus of Buto that the copper [blade] may be applied to it, while Horus is saved for Isis from the great destructions for those of Egypt, so that not a man or woman is left in their midst,’ while I send you. Do the like of these while I am sending you down to the heart of NN, whom NN bore; make a flame in her body, flame in her intestines. Put madness after her heart, fever after her flesh. Let her make the travels of the Shoulder constellation⁴⁶⁸ after the ‘Hippopotamus’ constellation.⁴⁶⁹ Let her make / the movements of the sunshine after the shadow while she is searching after NN, whom NN bore, at every place in which he is, she loving him, she being mad about him, she not knowing a place of the earth in which she is. Take away her sleep by night! Give her grief and anxiety by day! Do not let her eat! Do not let her drink! Do not let her lie down! Do not let her sit in the shadow of her house until she goes to him at every place in which he is, her heart forgetting, her eye flying, her glances turned upside down, she not knowing a place of the earth in which she is, until she sees him, her eye after his eye, her heart after his heart, her hand after his hand, she giving to him every. . . . Let [her] put the tip of her feet after his heels in the street at all times, without a time changed. Quickly, quickly! Hurry, hurry!”

your house. You should speak to the moon when it fills⁴⁷⁵ the sound-eye⁴⁷⁶ on the 15th day, you being pure for three days. You should recite this spell opposite the moon seven or nine times until he appears to you and speaks to you: “Hail, [†]SAKS [†]Amoun [†]SAKS [†]ABRASAKS, for you are the moon, the great one of the stars, he who formed them! Listen to these things which I said! Walk in accordance with the [words] of my mouth! * Another form of it again, to be recited opposite the moon: You should paint your eye with this paint, you [going] up before the moon. When it fills the sound-eye⁴⁷⁸ you see the figure of the god in sound-eye speaking to you:

“I am flame, high, AMRO⁴⁷⁹ MAAMT, true is my name, for I am . . . soul so [†]AGANAGYP Mars⁴⁸⁰ spirit, spirit, joy-Mars⁴⁸¹ is my real, true name . . . eternity. I am KHELBAI⁴⁸² SETET, HEN EM-NEFER⁴⁸³ is my name; SRO OSHENBET⁴⁸⁴ is my correct name.” Say [it] nine times, while you are standing opposite the moon, your eye equipped with this ointment: green and black eyepaint. Grind with Syrian honey; put the gall of a / full-grown chick to it; put it on a glass object; and leave it for yourself in a hidden place until the time in which you will need it. Put a goat’s tear in a “pleasure-wood”⁵¹⁴ of juniper or ebony, and tie around you a strip of male palm fiber.

The way of making the vessel inquiry of the lamp: You should bring a clean, white lamp without putting red lead⁵¹⁵ or gum water in it, its wick being of byssus; you should fill it with genuine oil or oil of dew; you should tie it with four linen threads which have not been burned;⁵¹⁶ you should hang in on an eastern wall [on] a peg of laurel wood; you should make the youth stand before it, he being pure, he not having gone with a woman; you should cover his eyes with your hand; / you should light the lamp; you should recite down into his head,⁵¹⁷ seven times; you should make him open his eyes; and you should ask him, saying, “What are the things which you have seen?” If he says, “I have [already] seen the gods near the lamp,” they tell him an answer concerning that which they will be asked.

If you wish to do it by yourself alone, you should fill your eyes with the aforementioned ointment. You should stand up opposite the lamp while it is lit and recite to it seven times while your eyes are shut. When you have finished, you should open your eyes. You see the gods behind you and you speak with them concerning that which you desire, you regularly doing it in a dark place.

*Its preparation:*⁵²¹ The ointment⁵²² which you should put on your eyes when you are going to make any “god’s arrival”⁵²³ with the lamp. You bring some flowers of the Greek bean plant.⁵²⁴ You find them in the place of the lupine sellers. You should bring them while they are tender / and put them into a glass vessel. If you leave it for forty days and bring it up and open it, you find it having [already] become bloody. In something of glass, you put it and you put the glass object in a pottery object in a place hidden at all times.

IAI IÄÖ EII AII AÖEÄ IIII YYY, draw off, thrust away every member of this dead body and the spirit of this tent⁷ and cause him to serve / against Karosa, whom Thelo bore. Aye, lord daimon, attract, inflame, destroy, burn, cause her to swoon⁸ from love as she is being burnt, inflamed. Sting the tortured soul, the heart, of Karosa, whom Thelo bore, until she leaps forth⁹ and comes to Apalos, whom Theonilla bore, out of passion and love, in this very hour, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly. As long as the divine mystery remains within you,¹⁰ do not allow Karosa herself, whom Thelo bore, to think of her [own] husband,¹¹ her child, drink, food, but let her come melting for passion and love and intercourse, especially¹² yearning for the intercourse of Apalos whom Theonilla bore, in this very hour, immediately, immediately; quickly, quickly.”

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil and R. Kotansky (ll. 16–47).

PGM XIXb. 1–3

*“... may he [bring] him, NN, to her, NN” (add the usual). Write with myrrh mixed with blood on leaves of flax.

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil.

6. On the name Zas, see PGM II. 117 and n.

7. For similar anthropological terms for “body,” see PGM I. 319; IV. 448, 1951, 1970, 2141.

8. σκότωσον (Preisendanz: “unfinstern”) refers to the Hellenistic topos of women swooning with love. See, for example, Apollonius, Argon. 3. 960–72 of Medea, for even a witch may swoon with love. [E.N.O.]

9. That is, from her house. Cf. PGM XXXVI. 71, 359 for the same expression.

10. According to A. D. Nock, JEA 11 (1925):158, μυστήριον is the magical act. So the meaning seems to be “as long as the magical spell which I have worked remains in effect on you.” [E.N.O.]

11. ἀνδρί is strange and probably incorrect. The verb μημμενέω requires either a genitive or an accusative, and the words in parallel construction here are genitive. [E.N.O.]

12. πλείστω[ς], which Preisendanz has retained despite the fact that this adverbial form occurs only in a quotation by Galen from Hippocrates where the manuscripts actually have the regular form πλείστα. Schubart (in Preisendanz’s apparatus) suggests πλείστα. [E.N.O.]

*. . . [Spell for] head[ache]:

“ . . . for you to mortals are . . .

. . . fulfill my perfect charm.”

*Tr.: E. N. O’Neil. Among the numerous studies of this papyrus, three are especially helpful: P. Maas, JHS 62 (1942): 33–38; L. Koenen, CEg 37 (1962): 167–74; A. Henrichs, ZPE 6 (1970): 193–212. The text has been restored on the basis of Pap. Berol. 7504, Pap. Amherst and Pap. Oxyr. ined. D. L. Page, Select Papyri, vol. III (L.C.L.): Literary Papyri Poetry, no. 146 (pp. 604–5) has reprinted part of Wilamowitz’s text of Pap. Berol. 7504. His interpretation of the situation and translation of the text is almost comic.

PGM XX. 4–12

- 5 [The charm] of the Syrian woman of Gadara, / for any inflammation:*

“[The¹ most majestic goddess’ child] was set

Aflame as an initiate²—and on

The highest mountain peak was set aflame—

[And fire did greedily gulp] seven springs

Of wolves, seven of bears, seven of lions.³

- 10 But seven dark-eyed maidens⁴ / with dark urns

1. For a love spell over a dog, see PGM XXXVI. 370.

2. The term τομίον, found only once in PGM, is most likely a reference to a cutting of papyrus; cf. the technical term ἱερατικόν. See Lewis, Papyrus in Classical Antiquity 181.

3. Preisendanz understands this as “deposit with.”

4. Preisendanz assumes that this term refers to the dog (cf. PGM IV. 1882–85, 2578; XXXVI. 370), but the spell is too fragmentary to be sure.

5. For the interpretation of these magical words see Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc. PETIANOUP is a personal name and means “He whom Anubis has given”; cf. Ranke, Ägyptische Personennamen I, 122, no. 11. CHAKE PŌPHOPI KACHE ANOCH, etc., is equivalent to “Darkness, Apophis, darkness I am. . . .” [R.K.R./J.B.]

1. These lines offer some whole and partial dactylic hexameters. They have been rearranged and used as the reconstructed Hymn 28; see Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 265. This reconstructed hymn has been translated here. [E.N.O.]

2. L. Koenen, “Der hrennende Horusknahe. Zu einem Zauberspruch des Philinna-Papyrus,” CEg 37 (1962): 167–74, identifies the παῖς μυροδόκος as the Horus child. Cf. the story of Isis and the child of the rulers of Byblos in Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 15–16, 357B–C, and Griffiths, Plutarch’s De Iside et Osiride 325–28. Cf. also the story of Demeter and Demophoon in Homeric Hymn to Demeter 231–55, with commentary by N. J. Richardson, The Homeric Hymn to Demeter (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1974) 231–34. Furthermore, see the note by J. G. Frazer, Apollodorus, vol. II, LCL (Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1979) 311–17. [E.N.O.]

3. On these springs and animals, see Koenen, “Der brennende Horusknahe,” 171–74. Cf. P. Maas, “The Philinna Papyrus,” JHS 62 (1942): 33–38, esp. 37: “I see no plausible connection of wells with wild bears.” [E.N.O.]

Drew water and becalmed the restless fire.”

The charm⁵ of the Thessalian Philinna, [for] headache:*

/ “Flee, headache, [lion] flees beneath a rock,

Wolves flee; horses flee on uncloven hoof

[And speed] beneath blows [of my perfect charm].”

*Tr.: W. C. Grese. See also the parallels in XII. 239–44, 252–57; XII. 765–99.

4. On the identity and role of these maidens see Maas, “The Philinna Papyrus,” 37–38; Koenen, “Der brennende Horusknabe,” 169.

5. This charm seems to be a historiola. Cf. Maas, “The Philinna Papyrus,” 37; Koenen, “Der brennende Horusknabe,” 169, 173–74.

1. For sun and moon as cosmic eyes, cf. the cosmic body of the deity in PGM XII. 242–45.

2. For the divine gifts, see also PGM XIII. 782–83.

3. Or “Upper and Lower Egypt”; cf. PGM XII. 256.

4. This is the “Ogdoad” of Hermopolis; see S. Morenz, Ägyptische Religion 184; Nun-Naunet, Huh-Hauket, Kuk-Kauket, Amun-Amaunet. [J.B.] For these eight guards, see PGM XIII. 743–45, 788–89.

5. These words are equivalent to Egyptian and mean “I am he who came forth from Nun.” Cf. PGM XII. 345; III. 549–58. [R.K.R.]

6. These three groups of letters may be Greek words: “. . . rule. I weary you. . .” If so, their context cannot be determined, as they are set amid magical words. [M.S.]

7. BENOUI is the Phoenix. Cf. PGM II. 104 and n. See Bonnet, RÄRG 594–96, s.v. “Phoenix.”

PGM XXIIa. 1

*“We would flee [from Trojan battle before death and ruin.]”

*Tr.: John Scarborough. This verse, probably Homer, Iliad 17. 714, has not preserved its title, though Preisendanz (on the basis of the following spell) believed it was a recipe for hemorrhage. The verse begins P. Berol. 9873, a collection of Homeric verses to be used for magico-medical purposes.

PGM XXIIa. 2–9

Another, for bloody flux:*

“the wrath of Apollo, far-darting lord.”¹

- 5 Spoken to blood, this [verse] cures bloody flux. / But if [the patient] recovers and shows ingratitude, take a pan of coals, throw [it in the altar (?)], and place the amulets over the smoke; add a root, and write this verse in addition:

“the Far-shooter, having attained his aim, has, therefore, given pain and will give it further.”²

*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM XXIIa. 9–10

Write [this] for pain in the breasts and uterus:*

- 10 “[him] / daughter of Zeus suckled and the wheat-bearing earth bore.”³

*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM XXIIa. 11–14

*Carried [with a magnetic] stone, or even spoken, [this verse] serves as a contra-ceptive:

“Would that you be fated to be unborn and to die unmarried.”⁴

Write this on a piece of new [papyrus] and tie it up with hairs of a mule.

*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM XXIIa. 15–17

- 15 [For one who suffers from elephantiasis, write this] verse and give it [to him] to wear:*

“[As when a] woman stains ivory with Phoenician purple.”⁵

*Tr.: John Scarborough.

PGM XXIIa. 18–27

- 20 *“Greetings, Helios; greetings, Helios; greetings, god over the heavens, with your name [being that] of the all-powerful! From the / seventh heaven [give] me [steady] favor before every race of men and all women, but especially before her, NN. Make 25 me as beautiful in her presence as IAŌ is, as rich as SABAŌTH, to be loved / like LAILAM, as great as BARBARAS, as honored as MICHAËL, as famous as GABRIËL, and [I shall be] highly favored.”

*Tr.: John Scarborough.

1. Cf. Homer, Il. 1. 75.

2. Cf. Homer, Il. 1. 96.

3. Cf. Homer, Il. 2. 548; also 8. 486; Od. 7. 332. But metaphorically ἀρουρα can mean the receiving of seed by a woman and bearing fruit (see, e.g., Theognis 582).

4. Cf. Homer, Il. 3. 40.

5. Cf. Homer, Il. 4. 141.

Pronounce the [Prayer of] Jacob seven times facing north and east.

*Tr.: D. E. Aune.

PGM XXIIb. 27–31

Request for a dream oracle, to a lamp: Purify yourself before your everyday lamp, and speak [the following] to the lamplight, until it is extinguished: “Be well, O lamp, who light the way to Harsentephtha and to Harsentechtha, and to the great [father] Osiris-Michael. / [If] the petition I have made is appropriate, [show] me water [and] a grove. If otherwise, show me water and a stone.”

*Tr.: D. E. Aune.

PGM XXIIb. 32–35

Another request for a dream oracle: Take your last morsel of food, and [show it to the] lamp, and while showing it, say [the invocation]. After saying [it] chew up [the morsel], drink wine on top of it, and go to sleep without speaking to anyone. If this is [performed, immediately] you will see someone speaking to you.

“ . . . OI . . . AL . . . OSMŌ . . . PRA, . . . / I am LAMPSYS, if this matter¹ has been granted to me, show a courtesan; otherwise, a soldier.”

*Tr.: D. E. Aune.

1. Or “such-and-such a matter.”

PGM XXIII. 1–70

- *[But¹ when with vows] and prayers [I had appealed] [To them], the tribes of dead, I took [the] sheep
 And slit their throats [beside the trough, and down]
 The dark blood [flowed. From out of Ere]bos
 5 Came gathering [the spirits] of the dead: /
 (5) [New brides, unmarried youths,] toil-worn old men,
 [And] tender [maidens] with fresh-mourning hearts,
 [And many] pierced by bronze-tipped spears, [men] slain
 In battle, still in armor stained with gore.
 10 [These many] thronged from ev'ry side around
 (10) The trough / with [awful] cry. Pale fear seized me.
 [But]² having drawn the sharp sword at my thigh,
 [I sat,] allowing not the flitting heads
 Of the dead to draw nearer to [the blood],
 15 And I in conversation spoke with them.
 (He has said what must be done:) /
 (15) "O³ rivers, earth, and you below, punish Men done with life, whoe'er has falsely sworn;
 Be witnesses, fulfill for us this charm.
 20 I've come to ask how I may reach the land
 Of that Telemachus, my own son whom /

 Who rule earth's [axis], starry dance, the Bears'
 Cold light. [And come] to me, surpassing all
 In self-control, O Phren. I'm calling [you],

1. Vv. 1–10 equal Homer, Od. 11. 34–43.

2. Vv. 11–13 equal Homer, Od. 11. 48–50.

3. Vv. 15–17 equal Homer, Il. 3. 278–80 except that in v. 15 the Iliad has καί in place of ὦ. In v. 16 the Iliad has τίνυσθον and the second hemistich of v. 17 appears in the Iliad as φυλάσσετε δ' ὄρκια πίστα.

4. Because of the fragmentary condition of the following lines (25–43) the reconstructed text of Hymn 24 has been used.

5. "Grant my desire": [κύρσαι δωσάμενοι. The translation is very tentative, for the Greek is uncertain. Preisendanz translates "schenkt Gewährung"; Vieillefond (p. 286) translates "ratifiez mes vœux" but in this commentary says: "Il faut comprendre: κύρσαι δ—'ayant accordé de ratifier.'" Preisendanz reports that this line begins with a space for six letters, but Wünsch's κύρσαι fills only five spaces. Perhaps we should read καὶ ἐπι, i.e., καὶ ἐπιδωσάμενοι, "and having given freely."

O B[r]i[ar]cus and Ph[r]asios and you,
 O Ixion and Birth and youth's decline, 40
 Fair-burning Fire, / [and may you come,] Infernal (35)
 And Heav'nly One, and [you who govern] dreams,
 And Sirius, who. . . ."⁶
 Standing beside the trough, I cried [these words],
 [For well] did I remember Circe's counsels,⁷ 45
 [Who] knew [all] poisons which the broad earth grows.⁸ /
 [Then came] a lofty wave of Acheron (40)
 Which fights with lions, [Cocytus] and Lethe
 And mighty Polyphlegethon.⁹ A host [Of dead] stood round the trough, [and first] there came 50
 The spirit of Elpeuor, my comrade.¹⁰
 (And so on.)

So, since this is the situation, either the poet himself suppressed¹¹ the remainder 55 because it was an elaboration of the spell in order to preserve the decorum of the (45) work, or the Peisistratides,¹² as they were assembling the other verses, withheld these because they considered them foreign to the passage here. [†]This is my opinion for many reasons. And so [†]¹³ I have myself inserted the lines as a rather valuable 60 creation of epic poetry.¹⁴ / You will find this whole document on the shelves in the (50) archives of our former home town, the colony of Aelia Capitolina¹⁵ in Palestine, and in Nysa in Caria and, up to the thirteenth verse,¹⁶ in Rome near the baths of 65
 Alexander¹⁷ in the beautiful library in the Pantheon,¹⁸ whose collection of books I

6. Preisendanz's version ends here. The remaining lines are taken from Vieillefond.

7. Cf. Homer, Il. 15. 412.

8. V. 39 equals Homer, Il. 7. 741 where ἤδη instead of οἶδα is read.

9. Cf. Homer, Od. 10. 513–14. In v. 41 the noun Πολυφλεγέθων is a hapax legomenon (see O. Höfer, in Roscher 3/2 [1902–9] 2713). Od. 10. 513 has Πυριφλεγέθων.

10. Cf. Homer, Od. 11. 51. With this Homeric line the verse portion of the papyrus concludes. The remaining section contains Julius Africanus' own evaluation of the verses.

11. We seem to have another example here of Homeric criticism in antiquity. Interestingly enough, Od. 11. 38–43 were rejected by several ancient scholars, including Zenodotus, Aristophanes of Byzantium, and Aristarchus.

12. A reference to the tradition in late antiquity that Peisistratus was responsible for the earliest recension of the Homeric poems. For a discussion of the subject, see J. A. Davison, "The Transmission of the Text," in A. J. B. Wace and F. H. Stubbings, eds., A Companion to Homer (London: Macmillan, 1962) 215–33, esp. 219–20.

13. The translation is tentative. Vieillefond daggers these words, for they seem hopelessly corrupt.

14. Line 49 translates ἄτε κῆμα πολυτελέστερον ἐπιεικῆς, but this a strange and otherwise unparalleled meaning of κῆμα.

15. Aelia Capitolina is the name given by Hadrian (A.D. 131) to the rebuilt Jerusalem. The statement seems to confirm, at least partially, Jerome's claim (De viris illustr. 63) that Julian was born at Emmaus in Palestine. Others call him a Libyan by birth.

16. This is a strange remark, for the first thirteen verses are Homeric. Surely this collection of volumes included the Iliad and Odyssey.

17. The Thermae Alexandrinae were constructed by rebuilding and enlarging the Thermae Neronianae in the Campus Martius just northeast of the Pantheon. These baths had their own water supply from the Alexandrian Aqueduct. See Life of Severus Alexander 20. 3–5 and 44. 4–6. Cf. CAH vol. 12 (1939), pp. 66 and 477.

18. Others, including Vieillefond, understood the words in ll. 53–54 to mean that Africanus built or served as the architect of the library. Yet we have no evidence that he was an architect but abundant testimony that he was a writer and intellect. It seems more probable, therefore, that Africanus here is saying that he "built the collection of books which constituted the library."

Kestos 18²⁰ of Julius Africanus

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. P. Oxy. 412 contains an excerpt from book 18 of the Kestoi of Sextus Julius Africanus, a Christian writer of the third century A.D. The work dealt with numerous subjects, including medicine, agriculture, natural history, military art, and, as this passage shows, with Homeric criticism and magic. Since Preisendanz prints only a part of the papyrus, the translation uses the full text as provided by Jean-René Vieillefond, Les "Cestes" de Julius Africanus. Etude sur l'ensemble des fragments avec édition, traduction et commentaires (Firenze: Edizioni Sansoni Antiquariato; Paris: Librairie Marcel Didier, 1970) 277–91.

PGM XXV. a–d.

a. P. Oxy. 959, 7.2 × 13 cm, contains a text of eight lines of magical characters and letters dated to about the third century A.D. The text remains unpublished.

b. P. Freib. inedit. (described by Preisendanz, P. Un. Bibl. Freiburg i. Br., O. Nr. 7.5 × 9 cm) is an unpublished, opisthographic text containing "characters" and a magical figure. Sixth century A.D.

20. Notice that, although the title of the work is in the plural κεστοί, each individual book seems to have the singular title κεστός.

1. According to W. Schubart, Einführung in die Papyrskunde (Berlin: Weidmann, 1918) 369, the twenty-nine letters represent the Coptic alphabet.

The numerically arranged oracular text, P.Oxy. XII. 1477, is here omitted as it has been shown to belong to the corpus known as the Sortes Astrampsychi, for which see Gerald M. Browne, The Papyri of the Sortes Astrampsychi, Beiträge zur klassischen Philologie 58 (Meisenheim am Glan: Hain, 1974); see also idem, “The Date of the Sortes Astrampsychi,” ICS 1 (1976): 53–58; idem, “A New Papyrus Codex of the Sortes Astrampsychi,” in *Arktouros. 1. According to Grenfell and Hunt, P.Oxy. 12 (1916) 237, magical symbols are given in the papyrus at this point, but the editors did not provide them.

1. The name should probably be articulated HÖR, i.e., Horus, who is often invoked in Egyptian scorpion spells. See Borghouts, Ancient Egyptian Magical Texts 51–85. [R.K.R.]

2. See n. 1 above.

3. See n. 1 above.

- Lay smooth the brine for seafarers.¹
 Then ev'ry fair wind² is raised;
 They shut out the blasts, and so, lord,³ grant
 10 The impassable to be passable.”

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. This rather charming and unpretentious poem is surely not a part of the regular PGM material. It is rather a poem—or a fragment of a poem—which is perhaps an ancient treatment of the theme that appears in Goethe's two poems, Meerestille and Glückliche Fahrt. Because of the literary aspect, J. U. Powell included these lines among the Lyrica Aesopota in his Collectanea Alexandrina (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1925) 195, no. 33. Despite the obvious poetic quality, no one has satisfactorily explained the meter (cf. Powell, p. 196). Grenfell thought that the verses are accentual, while Schmidt believed that they are a blend of trochaic and Cretic. For the references, see Preisendanz, ad loc. Whatever the case, the present translation uses a blend of iambic and anapaestic feet in an attempt to give in English some of the general effect of the Greek. These verses have been emended and stand as the reconstructed Hymn 29; see Preisendanz, vol. II, pp. 265–66.

PGM XXXII. 1–19

- *“I adjure you, Evangelos, by Anubis and Hermes and all the rest down below;
 5 attract and bind / Sarapias whom Helen bore, to this Herais, whom Thermoutha-10 rin bore,¹ now, now; quickly, quickly. By her soul and heart / attract Sarapias herself, whom [Helen] bore from her own womb,² MAEI OTE ELBÖSATOK ALA OUBÊTÔ 15 ÔEIO . . . AËN. Attract and [bind / the soul and heart of Sarapias], whom [Helen bore, to this] Herais, [whom] Thermoutharin [bore] from her womb [now, now;
 quickly, quickly].”

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. This spell, without a title, is clearly a love spell in which one woman seeks to attract another woman. Thus it belongs to the small group of lesbian spells. In form, these lines contain one spell repeated, with slight variations, three times: 1–9, 10–14, 14–19.

PGM XXXIIa. 1–25

- *“As¹ Typhon is the adversary of Helios, so inflame the heart and soul of that²
 5 Amoneios whom / Helen bore, even from her own womb, ADŌNAI ABRASAX PI-NOUTI³ and SABAŌS; burn the soul and heart of that Amoneios whom Helen / 10 bore, for [love of] this Serapiakos whom Threpte bore, now, now; quickly, quickly.”

- “In this same hour and on this same day, from this [moment] on, mingle / 15 together⁴ the souls of both and cause that Amoneios whom Helen bore to be this 20 Serapiakos whom / Threpte bore, through every hour, every day and every night.
 25 Wherefore, ADŌNAI, loftiest of gods, whose name is the true / one, carry out the matter, ADŌNAI.”

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. This section contains two spells—or one spell repeated with variations.

2. For ὄλος of the papyrus perhaps οὔρος should be read: “fair wind” is what the author seems to mean.

3. Can ἀναξ be Helios as represented by the famous Colossus Rhodius? Powell dates this poem to the period ca. A.D. 250–80, and the huge statue of Helios was complete ca. A.D. 168 and destroyed ca. A.D. 224. Yet the memory of this “wonder” continued for centuries. In any case, Helios was an important god on the island of Rhodes, and a reference to him seems appropriate.

1. Herais has a Greek name, while her mother, Thermoutarin, has an Egyptian name. [R.K.R.] The spelling of the names follows Preisendanz; cf. the apparatus ad loc.

2. On this formula, see D. Jordan, Philologus 120 (1976): 131–32.

1. The opening statement is troublesome and has attracted some attention. See A. S. Hunt, “An Incantation in the Ashmolean Museum,” JEA 15 (1929): 155–57; A. D. Nock, JEA 16 (1931): 124; K. Preisendanz, Philologische Wochenschrift 50 (1930): 748–49.

2. As the pronouns indicate, this spell is concerned with homosexual attraction.

3. This is Egyptian and means “O/The god.” See Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.

4. συγκαταμείγνυμι is a concept from friendship literature: true friends are two souls in one body, amicus est alter ego. The term is also erotic just as the simple μείγνυμι is regularly. [E.N.O.]

2. τριταῖος (πυρετός), as in the Hippocratic Aphorisms 3. 21 and Nature of Man 1. 5, is literally “every-third-day-fever.”

3. In contrast to PGM XVIIIb. 6, the papyrus has the normal τεταρταῖος.

4. Pollux, On. 1. 65 cod. B suggests the reading παρημέρινος; it does not occur in the medical writers. [J.S.]

5. λεπτοπυρετοῦ is a textual emendation; however, the word is unattested in LSJ, s.v. Cf. LSJ, Suppl. s.v. “λεπτοπυρέτιον.”

6. KOUK is Egyptian kky, “darkness”; cf. PGM XIII. 788–89.

6. The papyrus reads παραδόξον here and παρ’ ἀλόγων (παραλόγων) in l. 22, and so both Dodds and Preisendanz print their versions; but in a conversation it is reasonable to expect the second person to repeat the word which the first speaker has used. The translation understands παραδόξον in l. 22. [E.N.O.]

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. This fragment belongs not to a magical spell but rather to some literary piece, perhaps a Greek romance. See C. Bonner, "A Papyrus Describing Magical Powers," TAPA 52 (1921): 111–18; E. R. Dodds, "A Fragment of a Greek Novel (P.Mich. inv. no. 5)" in Studies in Honor of Gilbert Norwood, Phoenix Supp. I (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1952) 133–37. Dodds's theory that this fragment is part of a lost Greek romance seems logical in light of the conversational tone throughout, but the tone of ll. 19–24 makes this theory almost certain.

Love spell of attraction, excellent divination by fire, than which none is greater.
 70 It attracts men to women and women to men / and makes virgins rush out of their homes. Take a pure papyrus and with blood of an ass³ write the following names and figure, and put in the magical material from the woman you desire. Smear the

2. PEPHTHA PHŌZA PHNEBENNOUNI is equivalent to Egyptian “He is Ptah the healthy, the lord of the Abyss.” [R.K.R.]

3. This is to connect the spell with Typhon, invoked below. Cf. PGM IV. 2015, 2100, 2220.

4. ὀξοκόμη is from ὀξυκόμμη according to LSJ, s.v. It is also a hapax legomenon. The papyrus has ὀξωκόμη, which LSJ explains as dative of ὀξυκόμμη. See Schmidt, GGA 189 (1927):464–56, who refers to Pliny, NH 24. 3, 106; cf. also NH 13. 20, 66–67 for a discussion of Egyptian gums. [E.N.O.]

lawfulness, unlawfulness.¹² For Isis raised up a loud cry, and the world was thrown into confusion. She tosses and turns on her holy bed, and its bonds and those of the daimon world are smashed to pieces¹³ because of the enmity and impiety of her, world, ABLAMGOUNCHŌTHŌ ABRASAX, and daimons who are beneath the earth, arise, you who are from the depth, and cause her, NN, whom NN bore, to be sleepless, to fly through the air, hungry, thirsty, not finding sleep,¹⁵ to love me, NN 150 whom NN bore, passionately with passion in her guts, until she comes / and glues her female pudenda to my male one. But if she wishes to fall asleep, spread under her knotted leather scourges and thorns upon her temples, so that she may nod

11. ἀρχή occurs only here as a unit of measure. See A. Erman, ZÄS 33 (1895): 46.

12. For an Egyptian parallel to this exclamation see the historiola in H. O. Lange, Der magische Papyrus Harris, Det Kgl. Danske Videnskabernes Selskab, Historisk-filologiske Meddelelser 14/2 (Copenhagen: Høst, 1927) 75, 81: "Woe! Woe! Fire! Fire!" [R.K.R.]

13. Cf. Preisendanz's translation (accepting Hopfner's reconstruction in Archiv Orientalni 3 [1931]: 122): "hin wandte sie sich zum heiligen Lager, gesprengt werden seine Bande und zugleich die der Dämonenwelt . . ." (she turned to the holy bed [i.e., of Osiris], smashed to pieces are his bonds and those of the daimons' world . . .).

Charm to restrain anger and charm for success. (No charm is greater, and it is to be performed by means of words alone:) Hold your thumbs and repeat the spell 7 times: “ERMALLÖTH ARCHIMALLÖTH stop the mouths / that speak against me, 165 because I glorify your sacred and honored names which are in heaven.”

To augment the words: Take papyrus and write thus: "I am / CHPHYRIS.¹⁶ I must

* A charm to break spells: Take lead and draw on it a unique figure¹⁷ holding a torch in its right / hand, in its left—and at the left—a knife, and on its head three falcons, and under its legs a scarab, and under the scarab¹⁸ an ouroboros serpent.

The things to be written around / the figure are these:

16. CHPHYRIS is the god Khepri, the scarab. See PGM IV. 943 and n.; VII. 584 and n., and the Glossary, s.v. "Scarab."

17. The figure drawn below on the papyrus does not correspond to the description.

18. On the scarab see n. 16 above.

Prayer to Helios: A charm to restrain anger and for victory and for securing favor (none is greater): Say to the sun (Helios) [the prayer] 7 times, and anoint your hand with oil and wipe it on your head and face.

215 Now [the prayer] is: “Rejoice with me, you who are set over the east wind / and the world, for whom all the gods serve as bodyguards at your good hour and on your good day, you who are the Good Daimon of the world, the crown of the inhabited world, you who rise from the abyss, you who each day rise a young man and set an old man, HARPENKNOUPHI BRINTANTËNÖPHRI BRISSKYLMA / AROUR-

19. The isolated πάσις is vague. Preisendanz adds “Gestalt.” [E.N.O.]

20. The voes magicæ in ll. 190–91 are abbreviated forms of the ABLANATHANALBA and AKRAMMACHAMARI formulas. See the Glossary, s.v.

21. Preisendanz understands ONYR to be a form of Coptic NOYRE, “vulture, falcon.” But more likely the god Onouris is meant. Cf. PGM X. 12 and n.

22. The text of these lines is very uncertain and probably corrupt. The translation is tentative. [E.N.O.]

23. Read perhaps κατέχομαι, since κατέχω μέ makes no sense. [E.N.O.]

24. The text contains here incomprehensible letters, probably because of corruption rather than their being voes magicæ.

25. MESINTRIPHI is Egyptian and means “born of Triphis,” an epithet of Isis. See PGM XII. 232 and n. [R.K.R.]

26. PEPHNA (read PEPHTHA), PHÖZA, PHNBENNOUNI is Egyptian and means “He is Ptah the healthy, the lord of the Abyss.” Cf. above, ll. 43–44; PGM XIII. 1055. [R.K.R.]

PGM XXXVI. 312–20

* Charm to open a door: Take from a firstborn ram an umbilical cord that has not fallen to the ground, and after mixing in myrrh, apply it to the door bolts when you want to open a door, and say this spell, and you will open it immediately.

Now this is the spell: / “Open up for me, open up for me, door bolt; be opened, 315 swallows them, and release the frog alive at the place where you captured him. And take a seed of henbane, steep it in mare’s milk; and take the nasal mucus of a cow, with grains of barley, put these into a [piece of] leather skin made from a fawn and on the outside bind it up with mulehide skin, / and attach it as an amulet during 330

PGM XXXVI. 333–60

* Love spell of attraction over myrrh:⁴³ Say the spell and [put it on the] flat stone of the bath.

The spell is this: / “Myrrh, Myrrh, who serve at the side of gods, who stir up 335

39. This passage contains a historiola of Horus escaping from Seth/Typhon. See for a parallel Lichtheim, Ancient Egyptian Literature II, 214–23. [R.K.R.]

40. The frog was associated with fertility, and therefore in Egypt with Heket, the goddess of birth. See Bonnet, RÄRG 198–99, s.v. “Frosch”; M. Weber, “Frosch,” RAC 8 (1972): 524–38, esp. 524–29. [R.K.R.]

44. This locality is not identified.

45. The meaning of the term is obscure; it may refer to some item having the shape of a pinecone. See LSJ, s.v. “στρόβιλος.” Cf. PGM II. 25 and n.

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky. This fragmentary text was acquired in Egypt with the other magical papyri, PGM XXXVI and XXXVIII, and is thus presumed to contain portions of a magical spell; however, the recto (ll. 1–14) was written in a hand different from that of the verso (ll. 14–26) and seems to contain a text of a biblical or theological nature. The verso may contain a text on some type of divination.

PGM XXXVIII. 1–26

50. The animal of Seth/Typhon.

51. The silurus is a large river fish which seems to have been a part of the common fare, either pickled or salted. Cf. Pliny, NH 9. 17, 44; Aelian, NA 14. 25; Juvenal, Sat. 4. 33; 14. 132. The silurus also occurs in PGM IV. 3097, but Preisendanz there altered the text to read αἰλουρος, “cat.” Diehl, in Preisendanz’s apparatus, proposes the same emendation here. [E.N.O.]

52. MEROUTH is Egyptian mrw.t, “love.” [R.K.R.]

53. THOUTH PHIOPHAÖ is Egyptian and means “Thoth the great, the great.” [R.K.R.]

1. Eitrem reads ἀγνευσον [ἑπτα ἡμέρας καὶ . . .], which D. Mork, Eroticism in the Greek Magical Papyri: Selected Studies (Ann Arbor: University Microfilms, 1975) 72, translates with “Be purified for seven days.” The verb, however, is active and requires an object. Furthermore, the papyrus uses numerals, not words, so it is better to read ἀγνευσον [σὲ ζ’ ἡμέρας καὶ . . .]. [E.N.O.]

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. This papyrus is so fragmentary that the text owes more to Eitrem's ingenuity than to the copyist. Ll. 15–26 seem to be a doublet and, in part, an abridged version of IV. 1642–79. The edition of Preisendanz provides no translation; Moke offers one only of ll. 1–12.

*Tr.: E. N. O'Neil. The figure on the left is that of the dwarf god Bes. In the Greco-Roman period the erotic associates of Bes became so pronounced that he seems to have become a patron of brothels. See J. E. Quibell, Excavations at Saqqara (1905–1906) (Cairo: Imprimerie de l'Institut français d'archéologie orientale, 1907) 12–14. [R.K.R.]

1. El is the common Hebrew word for “god” but was also the name of a particular god worshiped mostly along the Palestine-Syrian coast.

2. Perhaps the definite articles before this and the two following terms should be omitted, and they should be taken as names of gods or demons. These magical texts rarely use the definite article before the names of deities invoked, and SATOUCHEOS looks like an epithet (“loaded, burdened”?) and PSATOUCHEOS like a byform of it.

1. Or, in Greek, “etc.”

2. Or “they must lead forth,” “who move like,” or “who lead forth.”

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky. Very little sense can be made from this scrappy fragment. The text seems to deal with responses to a type of knucklebone or dice oracle.

PGM LI. 1–27

*“I exhort you, daimon of the dead [and] the necessity of death which has hap- 5 pened in your case, image of the gods, to hear / my request and to avenge me, 10 Neilammon, whom Tereus bore, because Etes has brought a charge against me, / or against my daughter Aynchis or her children or those who might ever be [with] me. And I exhort you not to listen to those who have brought charges against us, either / [from] Hermes, whom . . . bore, [or] EU . . . S, who is known as [Apelles], 15 or from Harpochrates, whom Tereus bore, [who is] a wicked man and / ungodly 20 toward me, his father. I ask you, daimon of the dead, not to listen to them [but to] listen [only] to me, Neilammon, [since I am] / pious [toward the] gods, [and to 25 cause them to be] ill for their [whole] life.”

*Tr.: R. F. Hock. This necromantic request is directed against Neilammon’s legal opponents, one of whom appears to be his own son. The text follows the format of an Egyptian letter to the dead. Cf. Alan Gardiner and Kurt Sethe, Egyptian Letters to the Dead Mainly from the Old and Middle Kingdoms (London: Egypt Exploration Society, 1928). [R.K.R.]

PGM LIII–LVI

PGM LIII and LIV correspond to the unpublished texts of the papyrus rolls cataloged together as P. Strassb. I. 39 (P. gr. 1769 and 1770 in F. Preisigke, Griechische Papyrus der kaiserlichen Universitäts—und Landesbibliothek zu Strassburg, I. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs, 1912, 134–35). PGM LIII (no. 1769) measures 32 × 22 cm and contains fifteen lines; PGM LIV (no. 1770) measures 22 × 16 cm and contains ten lines. Both date from the Arabic period.

PGM LV and LVI correspond to the two unpublished texts, P. Strassb. I. 39A (P. gr. 762 and 788; Preisigke 136). They are written by the same hand and stem also from the Arabic period. PGM LV measures 28 × 22 cm and contains twelve lines; PGM LVI (17 × 11 cm) contains eight lines primarily made up of letter permutations, with SY SZ and SCH predominating.

2. For this notion of the collapse of the east and west, see PGM V. 284.

3. For mythical details regarding the death of Osiris, see Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 18, 358A–B; 35, 364F; 42, 368A; and Griffiths, Plutarch’s De Iside et Osiride 340–42, 434–35, 460; Diodorus Siculus 1. 11, with the commentary by Burton, Diodorus Siculus 60–61, 89, 95.

this [is the one who burned the papyrus boat of Osiris]³ and who [ate⁴ the sacred fish].⁵ Take into custody [him, NN, whom NN bore . . .].”⁶

*Tr.: R. F. Hock. The exact purpose of this spell is not known, though it is clearly a type of curse.

6. On Isis with a myriad of names see PGM LIX. 13; Apuleius, Met. 11. 22, p. 284, l. 9: deae multinominis; Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 53, 372E: μυριώνυμος. See Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 502–3.

7. PNOUN GMOËR is equivalent to Egyptian, “Nun (the Abyss), great power.” [R.K.R.]

8. The sequence of PHTHOËRI . . . PHTHAÖ is equivalent to Egyptian Pth wr and Pth ʿ3, “Ptah the great.” [R.K.R.]

9. This is Osiris.

10. On the identification of Isis and Providence (Pronoia), see Apuleius, Met. 11. 15, p. 277, l. 4; and on this see Griffiths, The Isis-Book 241–44, 323.

1. The full title is not preserved. The opening line may have read κατά[δεδεσμος]. Cf. Preisendanz, apparatus ad loc.

2. Or “such-and-such a wicked and impious man.” [R.D.K.]

3. The restoration is based on the parallel in Audollent, Defixionum Tabellae, no. 188, reprinted in Preisendanz, vol. II, p. 187. See on this point Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 18, 358A, where the burning of the boat is not mentioned, however. See for further references Griffiths, Plutarch's De Iside et Osiride 339–40.

4. The filling of the lacuna is based on the parallel in Audollent, Defixionum Tabellae, no. 188.

5. For sacred fish, see PGM V. 270–80, and J. F. Borghouts, “The Magical Texts of Papyrus Leiden I. 348,” OMRM 51 (1971): 26 (a similar sacrilege), and Excursus III 210–17. See Bonnet, RÄRG 191–94, s.v. “Fische, heilige.” [R.K.R.]

6. Assuming the restoration in Preisendanz as correct. However, it seems more likely to restore the parallel phrase from above, “take into custody [this wicked and impious . . . man]. [R.D.K.]

1. λυχνίζω occurs only here; ἐνλυχνιάζω is the regular verb. Cf. PGM I. 293; III. 585; IV. 1089; etc. [E.N.O.]

2. The repetition here, which is an Egyptian form of emphasis, has troubled Preisendanz. He omits one word and adds “(du bist es).” [E.N.O.]

3. Preisendanz takes this to be Isis-Nephthys, with reference to PGM XII. 235. [R.K.R.]

4. A measure of length which has no fixed value. Strabo (17. 1, 24) says that it varied from 30 to 120 stades (i.e., about 1,820–7,280 feet). [E.N.O.]

5. The name Dardaniel occurs only here. The city remains unidentified. The epithet ἐπτάπυλος (with seven gates) is usually associated with Thebes in Boiotia (see LSJ, s.v.), a city that plays a role in the sagas about the Trojan War. According to some traditions, Dardanos was the founder of Dardania (Troy); see Homer, Il. 20. 215–16. Whether there is a connection between these names is unclear. Cf. also PGM IV. 1716 and n.; IV. 2612; VII. 695.

7. The doctrine is similar to the creation myth in C. H. I. 17–19. See for further references Bousset, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien 117–18. In the lines of the papyrus only three elements are named; water is omitted.

*Tr.: R. F. Hock. The text is the same as in PGM LXXX., but by another scribe and in better condition.

PGM LXXX. 1–5

Charm to restrain anger, [which is to be spoken] three times: “I am the soul of darkness, ABRASAX, the eternal one, MICHAËL, but my true name is THŌOUTH, THŌOUTH. Restrain the anger and wrath of him, NN, toward me, NN, with the authority of the great / god NEOUPHNEIŌTH.”

*Tr.: W. C. Grese. According to Preisendanz (ad loc.), this list of greetings was supposed to give protection, perhaps protection for a house—an interpretation he derives from his reading of the other side of the papyrus, “defense for a house.”

1. The figure is given below, following the spell. See Preisendanz, vol. II, plate IV, figure 2. For a collection of images of Artemis multimammaea, see R. Fleischer, Artemis von Ephesus und verwandte Kultstatuen aus Anatolien und Syrien, EPRO 35 (Leiden: Brill, 1973).

2. The apparent duplication is in the papyrus.

1. The voces magicae are Coptic, written in Greek letters.

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of G. Manteuffel, Papyri Varsovienses (Warsaw: University of Warsaw, 1935) no. 4: Fragmentum libri magici, 6–7. All that can be said of this fragmentary text is that it seems to have preserved a section of a magical textbook dealing with the making of a certain ingredient.

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of E. H. Kase, Jr., Papyri in the Princeton University Collections, II (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1936) no. 107: Gnostic Fever Amulet, 102–3. This fever amulet is of special interest because it cites several biblical verses. Despite the writer’s use of these citations, the character of the spell shows it is syncretistic rather than distinctively Christian. In fact, the incoherent manner by which the verses are quoted suggests that the writer was ignorant of their context and meaning.

[magical symbols, about ten in number]

1. In accordance with our standard translation of the aorist participle λάβων, these participles are rendered as imperatives.

2. Or συνπεριπήγνυμι may mean “make to congeal around together.” The word is apparently attested nowhere else in Greek literature.

3. For the use of roots in magic, cf. PGM XXIIa. 6; XII. 103, 397, 659, etc.

1. As the editor points out, the reading of the text at this point is far from certain.

2. This is a quotation of LXX Ps 90:1–2, with some peculiar variations.

3. This is a somewhat confused quotation of the Lord’s Prayer, Mt 6:9–11. The papyrus may read “your father.”

4. Apparently this is an allusion to LXX Is 6:3.

5. Read “Michael.”

[Another]:

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of J. Enoch Powell, The Rendel Harris Papyri (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1936) no. 56: Magical Spells, p. 38. This text is taken from three tiny fragments which date to the first or second century A.D. Although the text is quite fragmentary, its early date makes it important. Furthermore, the recurring expression “another [spell],” shows that we are dealing with a collection from a magical handbook.

PGM LXXXVI. 1–2

*“Protect him, NN, whom [she, NN bore].” Attach [this] as an amulet around the neck.¹

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of P. Collart, Les Papyrus Théodore Reinach, II (Cairo: L’Institut français d’archéologie orientale, 1940) no. 89: Formulaire magique, 32–33. This tiny fragment preserves portions of two spells; the first contains instructions for making a simple amulet. The second preserves the beginning of a magical procedure of an uncertain nature.

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the new reading of F. Maltomini, “Osservazioni al testo di alcuni papiri magici greci. (III.),” Studi classici e orientali 32 (1982): 235–40 (tav. XXVI),

1. Reading δαιμόνια instead of δαιμονιε.

1. For similar instructions, cf. PGM VII. 198, 208; XIII. 669.

2. The editor restores the first letters of this word. Performing a magical ritual on a specified day is common in the PGM; see, e.g., PGM VII. 155–67; XIII. 15, 349, 1037.

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of D. S. Crawford, Papyri Michaelidae (Aberdeen: The Egypt Exploration Society, 1955) no. 27: Magical Charm, 49–50. The editor suggests that this fragment is a curse or a love charm; however, the mention of “daily” in l. 11, as well as “who has” in l. 10 (a typical description in the PGM for an affliction) suggests it is a fever amulet.

PGM XCII. 1–16

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of B. R. Rees, H. I. Bell, and J. W. B. Barns, eds., A Descriptive Catalogue of the Greek Papyri in the Collection of Wilfred Merton, F.S.A., II (Dublin: Hodges Figgis, 1959), no. 58: Magical Charm, 22–24 (pl. VII).

1. The editors suggest the first three letters are a magical name, EIE. L. I, they admit, makes little sense regardless of what is read; however, the photograph of the papyrus shows that one might read the preposition eis, “for, unto.” The sentence thus seems clearer, although the reading and translation remain tentative.

2. The language and remper of this charm show that this spell is one used to acquire favor and victory. Cf. for example PGM XII. 397–400 etc.

3. The following list of names whose powers the client is requesting suggests that each person named is recognized for his special attribute. Thus, Akryskylos is recognized for his strength, Euōnos for his speech, and so on. Neither Akryskylos nor Euōnos (sic for Euō[nym]os? [so the editors]) can be identified; however, each of the following personalities is recognizable. Cf. PGM VII. 1017–26.

4. Or, possibly, “the glances of Solomon,” according to the editors. Although Solomon was a popular magical figure, the mention of his “eyes” is not common. Consult the note in the original cited above, p. 23, n. 6. On the other hand, cf. the αὐγή that illumines Solomon’s mind in the Test. Sol., Rec. C, Prologus, 2 (McCown, Testament 76).

5. Adonis is here rendered by the variant spelling Adōnios. Adonis is often associated with Kypri, a popular name for Aphrodite.

6. Or, if accusative of duration, “for the whole day,” that is, presumably for the duration of each day which the person wears the charm.

1. The command to bury something occurs in PGM IV. 2215; XII. 100, where an inscribed tablet and an egg are referred to. The context here, however, gives no hint of what is to be buried.

2. On sprinkling dove’s blood to dismiss a deity, see PGM II. 177.

Egyptian magical handbook is fairly certain. Although the two sides contain no vores magicae, and thus we may have a simple manual of sacrificial procedures, the presence of the name Hekate in l. 6 (side 1) suggests a magical text. Also, in the margin of l. 7 the number 43 occurs, which the editor describes as a numbering of the magical procedures.

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of J. W. B. Barnes and H. Zilliacus (see introductory note on previous spell), 46, side i, ll. 7–10; side ii, ll. 11–21. The procedure described here is of an uncertain purpose. The spell after l. 10 (side ii) may be independent of the preceding lines.

PGM XCIV. 1–6

Zilliacus, eds., The Antinoopolis Papyri, II (London: Egypt Exploration Society, 1960) no. 66: Magico-Medical Prescriptions, 47–49. The papyrus begins with the fragments of an invocation of unknown purpose. The prescriptions are separated by paragraph marks.

3. References to stating one's wish are regularly found throughout the PGM. For very similar wording, cf. PGM IV. 1907.

4. As the editor points out, the cock and the pig probably serve as sacrificial animals. For the use of a cock in magical sacrifices, see PGM IV. 237; XII. 312; XIII. 377, 437–38, and so on. Pigs are found less often as sacrificial animals in the PGM.

1. As the editors suggest, these lines may have consisted entirely of magical words. In the sequence ERBĒTH can be read.

2. Or “easy healing.” The word is a hapax legomenon, as the editors point out.

(a). This portion of the formulary describes the engraving of parts of a figure, perhaps a magical doll for the purpose of subjugating someone. The description of the mouse skin either begins a new spell or introduces part of a procedure belonging to the previous charm.

PGM XCV. 7–13

*Concerning the mole[-rat]: ² one (?) mole-rat that is alive . . . a remedy (?) for (?)

4. Reading perhaps a proper name here; however, the editors note that νηρὸν may be “fresh (water)” (cf. modern Greek νερό), in which case the spell is to be recited over it.

1. The prescription is describing what to engrave on a waxen or clay figure such as we find in PGM IV. 296–335, 2373–2440; and VII. 927. These references describe the function of the left sole of the foot (along with other parts of the body) in a specified magical procedure. PGM VII. 927 (a charm to subject someone) commands one to place a tablet under the left sole of the foot. The mention of subjection in the spell above suggests that we have here a “charm to subject” (hypotaktikon).

2. The editors point out that the blind-rat or mole-rat (Spalax typhlus) may possibly be used as the remedy for the epilepsy.

10 epilepsy (?)³ . . . / on the first of the month . . . [altar?]. . . .

[col. ii, 4]

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of J. W. B. Barns and H. Zilliacus (see note on previous spell) 71, col. ii. The editors identify this spell as a prescription for the “sacred disease.” The spell, we should note, comes under a heading apparently arranged according to the magical virtues of the animal. Such arrangements are typical for a number of magico-medical prescriptions, in which case this section would enumerate the medicinal or magical values of the blind-rat (Spalax typhlus).

PGM XCV. 14–18

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of J. W. B. Barns and H. Zilliacus (see note on previous papyrus) 71, fr. (b). The formulary at this point seems to provide a remedy for epilepsy. The beginning of a new remedy seems to be given at the end.

PGM XCVI. 1–8

5 * “. . . AS (7 times) MELI XARO ÔRO AAAAAAA BAINCHÔÔÔCH MAI ÊEI / LĒNA-GKOLI, protect him who carries [this amulet].”

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the revised text of R. W. Daniel, “Some PHYLAKTĒRIA,” ZPE 25 (1977): 150–53 (text two). The text was originally published by J. O’Callaghan in Chronique d’Égypte 43 (1968): 111–13, and subsequently commented upon by M. Vandoni in Istituto Lombardo, Rendiconti 102 (1968): 532–34 and again by J. O’Callaghan in Studia Papyrologica 8 (1969): 115–18. It is recognized that the text is a version of ll. 7–8 of P. Oslo I.5 (= PGM 3); however, whereas PGM 3 is Christian, this one is not. This text, moreover, is virtually complete, save for the slightly cut-away edges which suggest the papyrus was inserted in a case to be worn as an amulet.

PGM XCVII. 1–6

*Tr.: H. D. Betz, following the edition and commentary by D. Wortmann, “Neue magische Texte,” Bonner Jahrbücher 168 (1968): 109–11. Extant are only a few remnants of two columns, the first of which is too fragmentary to translate here. The individual spells in this collection of recipes are divided by paragraphi. Wortmann thinks the spell is against eye disease because the lizard is often used to that effect in magic. See A. D. Nock, “The Lizard in Magic and Religion,” Essays I, 271–76. The purpose of the first recipe cannot be recovered.

PGM XCVII. 7–9

7. Apparently referring to the desert cemetery where hyenas roam about. Thus Wortmann, "Neue magische Texte," 96.

8. Following Wortmann's interpretation of ōap as "temple" (97). (I should prefer to take ōap as abatōn, "innermost shrine" [see l. 18] and the god as Osiris. Note that Osiris is called "he who rests in the abatōn," whereby "rest" in Egyptian is hṯp, which corresponds to Greek ἐνδοκεῖν. [J.B.]

9. The blood is that of the enemies of the gods, especially that of Seth. See D. Wortmann, "Das Blut des Seth," ZPE 2 (1968): 227-30, who refers to Plutarch, De Is. et Os. 6, 353 B, and Rv 16:4 as parallels.

10. That is, Hermes-Thoth.

11. For the four winds, see PGM III. 496; XII. 84, 238; XIII. 761, and Wortmann, "Neue magische Texte," 97-98.

12. The list of names contains the twenty-four names of the Greek alphabet; each name, except the first and the last, also ends with the letter of the alphabet. See Domseiff, Das Alphabet 146-51; Wortmann, "Neue magische Texte," 98, who calls attention to the unique character of this list.

13. For the MASKELLI MASKELLÖ formula, see Glossary, s.v.

14. Ten lunar months was considered the normal period of pregnancy. See J. Bergman, "Decem illis diebus," Ex Orbe Religione. Studia Geo Widengren oblata (Leiden: Brill, 1972) I, 332-46.

*Tr.: H. D. Betz, following the edition and commentary by D. Wortmann, “Neue magische Texte,” Bonner Jahrbücher 168 (1968): 85–102. The papyrus was found folded up in a clay vessel and deposited in a cemetery. Inside the folded papyrus were found two wax figurines in erotic embrace (cf. PGM IV. 296ff.).

The papyrus, a request for a dream oracle, was cut into several pieces, all severely damaged. It is not clear whether there were one or two spells. Some of the lines can be restored on the basis of remarkably close parallels elsewhere in PGM.

1. There is space for a single letter here, perhaps $\tilde{E}$; see n. 2, below.

2. After the Ō, there is one letter to make out. It is probably an omicron. The first nine letters, then, probably contain a series of vowels, viz., AEŌË AEEŌŌ.

3. The editor suggests that these letters may contain the Greek for "portal of Erebus" (reading $\theta\acute{\upsilon}\rho\omega\nu\ \epsilon\rho\acute{\epsilon}\beta\omega\nu$). Erēchos was the mythological place of nether darkness which formed a passage from Earth to Hades.

4. Supplying here an alpha before the final iota.

1. Following the likely restoration of A. Henrichs.

2. On this Aoth-logos, Brashear points the reader to PGM IV. 1376; Delatte and Derchain 416, 487; Audollent, Defixionum Tabellae, no. 242. 9.

3. BASYM, in Greek letters, corresponds to Aramaic besum, "in the name of": see Glossary, s.v. Thus the text perhaps reads, "in the name of Isaac, [Abraham,] Jacob." In the lacuna, Brashear restores instead "... Isaac [Sabaōth, Iao], Jacob"; however, "Abraham" is another possible reading, as the three names form a natural, formulaic grouping in magical literature. See M. Rist, "The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: A Liturgical and Magical Formula," JBL 57 (1938): 289–303.

1. PHNOU may be equated with the Coptic word pnoun, "the abyss." Otherwise it is the magical name for a god in PGM XII. 290 and is found in frequent combinations throughout the PGM.

2. PERKMEŃ, perhaps Coptic for "the Lord of darkness" or "house of darkness."

3. BIOU BIOU BIBIOU: BIOU is frequent in the PGM and is identical to the name of a decan. Cf. W. Gundel, "Dekane und Dekansternbilder," Studien der Bibliothek Warburg 19 (1936): 233–34.

4. In these lines there are thirty-six characters which correspond to the number of decans and their deities.

5. NOURI is Coptic for "vulture."

6. EPNEBAI may reflect the words p nb by, "the lord of souls," in DMP XXVIII, 1 (cf. Copt. neb bai).

7. For this Egyptian formula: lotus (serphouth)—lion (moui)—ram (sro), cf. PGM III. 659.

8. RINT' is Sahidic for "my name." Cf. PGM IV. 83–84.

9. MĒI MĒI (also in ll. 9–10) is Fayumic and Bohairic for “truth.”

10. The god Osiris.

11. This name is to be equated with RAINCHÖÖCH: both names mean "spirit of darkness." See Glossary, s.v.

12. This popular name can be equated with "eternal" and has become the subject of some etymological speculation (see Daniel, "Two Love-Charms," 264, n. 17, for literature).

1. This verb, ἀεροπετέω, is used only in magical texts, as Daniel points out, pp. 249–50.

2. Reading Ailia instead of Elia.

*Tr.: H. D. Berz, following the edition by Eric G. Turner, “The Marrow of Hermes,” in Images of Man in Ancient and Medieval Thought. Studia Gerardo Verbeke . . . dicata (Louvain: Louvain University Press, 1976) 169–73. The love spell from Oxyrhynchus (ca. A.D. 300) presents very difficult problems, so that the translation by necessity remains tentative. See also the different readings and interpretations by Giuseppe Giangrande, “The Marrow of Hermes: A Papyrus Love-Spell,” Ancient Society 9 (1978): 101–16; P. Gorissen, “Once more the Love-Spell of Hermes and the Marrow,” ZPE 37 (1980): 199–200; and J. Gwyn Griffiths, “Hermes and the Marrow in a Love-charm,” ZPE 38 (1980): 287–88.

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of Z. M. Packman, “Three Magical Texts from the Washington University Collection,” BASP 13 (1976), no. 1: Astrological Text, 175–77 (plate). The text, constructed from two separate fragments, seems to contain instructions for a special type of astrological divination. The incomplete text at the beginning of the horoscope shows that the client participates in an auditory revelation of a god. This probably contains the end of the procedure section of the magical spell.

1. The phrase is unknown. Perhaps it is Hermes himself who “is turned around by the marrow,” the marrow referring to a magical substance used in the ritual operation. In this case the verb is construed as passive, with “marrow” as the genitive of agent. This avoids the need to emend the word to the accusative case (so P. Gorissen), or to take the genitive as “locative” (so Turner), since this normally requires the dative case. [R.D.K.]

2. Perhaps the words are an interjected “commercial”: “and this sheet really works.” The πιττάκιον is the sheet or piece of papyrus on which the spell itself is written; see Turner, 172; Giangrande, 107, for parallels. [R.D.K.]

3. Cf. on this notion PGM IV. 1544–45.

4. Cf. the parallel in PGM XIc. 3. For another interpretation, see Giangrande, 109.

5. Thus Turner’s translation. Gorissen takes ζητουν, “search out,” to be a personal name.

1. Packman translates this more literally: “Let the stars be set upon the board where (they belong) by nature. . . .” The sense may suggest that the planets and stars are to be arranged in their acknowledged order in their sphere of orbit.

2. The term for “sun” is represented in the papyrus by the symbol ☉.

3. The term for “moon” is represented by the symbol ☾.

4. That is, Helios.

5. That is, Selene.

6. That is, the planet Saturn.

7. That is, the planet Mars.

8. That is, the planet Venus.

9. That is, the planet Mercury.

10. That is, the planet Jupiter.

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of Z. M. Packman, "Three Magical Texts from the Washington University Collection," BASP 13 (1976), no. 3: Amulet, 179–80 (plate). The text is presumably a charm for scorpion sting.

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of P. J. Sijpesteijn, "Amulett gegen Skorpionsstich," ZPE 22 (1976): 108 (Taf. IIIb). This spell is similar to other amulets against scorpion sting in the PGM (cf., e.g. PGM XXVIII a–c).

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the revised edition of R. W. Daniel, "Some ΦΥΑΑΚΤΗΡΙΑ," ZPE 25 (1977): 145–49 (text one). Daniel greatly improved the reading of the original edition in P. Proulx and J. O'Callaghan, Studia Papyrologica 13 (1974): 83–88. Daniel also offers a tentative reconstruction of the lacunae in the text. The translation above reflects Daniel's improved text, but not all of his tentative reconstructions. For further commentary see F. Maltomini, "Osservazioni al testo di alcuni papiri magici greci, I," Miscellanea Papyrologica, Papyrologica Florentina 7 (Firenze: Gonnelli, 1980) 173–75.

1. Following the restoration suggested by R. Merkelbach.

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of P. Fabrini and F. Maltomini, in A. Carlini et al., Papiri Letterari Greci (Pisa: Giardini, 1978) no. 34: P. Mon. Gr. Inv. 216: Formulario magico, 237–66. Although this text is comprised of twenty-three tiny fragments of which little sense can be made, its importance should not be underestimated, for it is one of a few magical papyri which antedates the Christian period. This, along with the so-called Philinna Papyrus (PGM XX), dates to the first century. Fragmentary as it is, one can detect that the papyrus contains portions of a love spell. Of special importance are the occasional Egyptian deities mentioned along with the Greek, thus showing that a syncretistic influence was already at work in the magic of this early period.

PGM CXVIII

P. Palau Rib. inv. 200 another “magical scroll” similar to those published by G. M. Parássoglou in Studia Papyrologica 13 (1974) (= PGM CIII a–c.). A description and photograph of the scroll, with no transcription of the text, was published by José O’Callaghan, “Rollo mágico (PPalau Rib. inv. 200),” Studia Papyrologica 17 (1978): 85–87.

PGM CXIXa. 1–3

Love spell through touch: Take milk . . . 9 echthei, 12 calē. . . .

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of R. Pintaudi, Dai Papiri della Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana (PLaur. III), Papyrologica Florentina 5 (Firenze: Gonnelli, 1979) no. 57: “Frammenti di Manuale Magico (PL II/52),” 34–36. This papyrus contains fragments of approximately eight short spells. The opening line preserves the end of a conjuration of uncertain purpose; portions of a love spell follow.

PGM CXIXa. 4–6

Fetch ing charm:* On an ostrakon . . . / “BOLSAK SAR . . . , the thoughts. . . .” 5

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky. On this magical papyrus, see the introductory note above. Since this tiny, fragmentary spell has preserved its title, it can be assumed the invocation is to be engraved on a potsherd with the aim of binding the thoughts (i.e. “brains”) of a desired woman, as well as other parts of the human constitution.

PGM CXIXa. 7–11

Charm to subject:* “. . . subject [to me] . . . CHR.” Write . . . / an aphrodisiac (?). 10

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky. See the introductory note to PGM CXIXa. 1–3 for the bibliographical reference to this text. The fragmentary word translated “aphrodisiac” may introduce a new spell or may simply show that the spell to subject can work as an aphrodisiac as well.

PGM CXIXb. 1–5

*“. . . A . . . EDĒS wounds . . . vain babbling, and also mingle. . . .”

[For fever with shivering fits:] Take an olive leaf and engrave: “. . . .” / [For 5 daily] and nightly fever. KELLIOTON. Take. . . .

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky. See the introductory note to PGM CXIXa. 1–3. This portion of the magical manual deals in part with a spell for fever. The invocation preceding it serves an unknown purpose. Furthermore, it is not clear whether another formula follows the charm for fever. The editor of the papyrus suggests that κάλλιστον (sc. φίλτρον), “an excellent philtre” could be read in the letters KELLIOTON.

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of R. Pintaudi, Dai Papiri della Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana (PLaur. III) (Firenze: Gonnelli, 1979) no. 58: "Ὄνομα πτερυγοειδὸς (PL III/1442) 37–38 (Tav. LIII). This "winged" formation is made up of an adjective, σταφυλότομος, attested in only one other place. According to the Thesaurus Graecae Linguae, cited by Pintaudi, the adjective means uvam incidens, "cutting the uvula." This term contains a play on words, as words with the same root can also refer to a bunch of grapes. It is no coincidence, then, that in magical literature winged formations such as that shown above were also referred to as grape-shapes (cf. PGM III. 70). The manner in which the formation is written allows one to read "cutting the uvula" down the left margin. Conceivably, this spell served as an amulet to heal its wearer from inflammation of the uvula. For a parallel, see the gemstone published by A. Sambon, Le Musée 6 (1909): 111.

*Tr.: Roy Kotansky, following the edition of Giovanni Geraci, "Un'actio magica contro affezioni fisiche e morali," Aegyptus 59 (1979): 63–72. This magical text has no real parallel in the corpus of magical literature. It appears to be an elaborate phylactery, listing a number of ailments both physical and psychological. The initial lines of the spell probably contained a plea that the vices listed in the two columns should cease or come to an end. The entire spell is enclosed in an ouroboros figure which has not been well preserved on the papyrus.

PGM CXXII. 1–55

*An excerpt of enchantments¹ from the holy book called Hermes,² found in He-liopolis in the innermost shrine of the temple,³ written in Egyptian letters and translated into Greek. /

5 Enchantment using apples:⁴ "Three times I shall throw apples, . . . and thereby I [col. I, 5] shall provide this timely love spell for both mortal people and immortal gods.
10 I . . . , I threw the apple and I hit [her] with the apple. / Setting everything aside, [I, 10] may she fall madly in love with me; whether she takes it in her hand and eats . . . or holds it in her bosom, may she not stop loving me. O goddess born on Cyprus,⁵ / 15 carry out this perfect charm. . . .

1. So according to Brashear's interpretation, p. 265.

2. That is, Hermes Trismegistos. Cf. PGM IV. 885–87.

3. This refers to the temple library.

4. Although reportedly coming from an Egyptian holy book, this love spell contains Greek magic. The importance of apples in declarations of love and in oracles is well known. See A. R. Littlewood, "The Symbolism of the Apple in Greek and Roman Literature," HSCP 72 (1967): 154–55, 157.

5. That is, Aphrodite; for commentary, see Brashear, 268–69.

"I have taken your . . . eye.⁶ I, NN, have taken your soul.⁷ I, NN, have drunk [I, 15] from your blood. I, NN, have used . . . I, NN, have devoured your liver.⁸ I, NN,

"The goddess⁹ in heaven looked down upon him, and it happened to him according to every wish of his soul . . . NN says: From the day [and] from the hour I, NN, [do this act] to you; you will love me, be fond of me, and value me . . . I die. / O Lady, goddess, [Isis] . . . , carry out for me this perfect charm." 25

Having¹⁰ raised your hands toward the stars, let down . . . NN, and . . . and black night; and standing [awake] and sleeplessness and . . . you shall use [these?] before you see the sun. Take myrrh and chant and anoint your face: [I, 25]

"You are the myrrh with which Isis¹¹ was anointed / when she went to the 30 bosom of Osiris, her . . . brother, and gave him her favor on that day. Give me. . . ." [II, 5]

"Wake up him, NN, or her, NN, Mistress Isis, and carry out this perfect charm.
Hail,¹² Helios; hail you who rise; hail also to you, the gods who rise together with him . . . / let rejoice . . . nor concerning a silver coin, but concerning him, NN, . . . 35 goes . . . / [that] you bring him, NN, O Helios . . . the ever . . . day, him, NN, . . . 45 a coin . . . ; / O goddess born on Cyprus,¹³ carry out this perfect charm." [II, 20]

For headache: ¹⁴ "Osiris has a headache; Ammon has a headache at the temples of his head; Esenephthys¹⁵ has a headache all over her head. May Osiris' headache not stop, may Ammon's headache at the temples of his head not stop, until / first he, 55 NN, stops all. . . ." [II, 30]

*Tr.: H. D. Betz, following the edition and commentary by W. Brashear, "Ein Berliner Zauberpapyrus," ZPE 33 (1979): 261–78. The love spell is one of the oldest Greek magical papyri; it was found in Abusir el Melek, Egypt (first c. A.D.). For further notes see F. Mal-tomini, "Osservazioni al testo di alcuni papiri magici greci, II," Civiltà classica e cristiana 1 (1980): 375–76.

6. Apparently, the lines refer to some sort of cannibalistic ceremony done for the purpose of erotic magic. See Brashear, 269–71, who refers to PGM IV. 296–335, and A. Henrichs, Die Phoinikika des Lollianos, Fragmente eines neuen griechischen Romans, Papyrologische Texte und Abhandlungen 14 (Bonn: Habelt, 1972) 70, n. 77.

7. The term may be a euphemism for the sexual organs (see Glossary, s.v. "Soul"). See Brashear, 272.

8. The liver plays a special role in erotic magic. See Brashear, 272.

9. A reference to some mythical detail.

10. Apparently some kind of nocturnal ceremony is described. See Brashear, 273.

11. The second column contains Egyptian magic. The mythical love of Isis is imitated here; cf. PGM
XXXVI. 288–89 and Brashear, 274–75.

12. Apparently the beginning of a hymnic passage, addressed to Helios.

13. See n. 5 above.

14. A charm against headache, using a threat against the gods that they will not stop suffering headaches until they have healed the operator. See Brashear, 276, for parallels.

15. That is, Isis-Nephthys; cf. PGM XII. 234.

1. A variation of the common magical name MARMARIÖTH, on which see K. Preisendanz, PRE 14 (1930): 1881; Kropp, Koptische Zaubertexte IV sec. 3206; Hopfner, OZ I, sec. 746.

2. A form of the magical word EULAMÖ. For literature and additional occurrences of the term outside the PGM, consult Maltomini, 71–72, n. 11.

3. This name may be a conflation of the names “Moses” and “Seth.” Alternatively, the name may be explained from Coptic and Demotic as “lion-Seth.” See Maltomini, 72–73, n. 15.

4. Possibly Coptic for “Offspring of Seth”; see Maltomini, 73–74, n. 16.

5. An angelic name meaning “God has spoken.” See Schwab, Vocabulaire de l’Angéologie 299. Cf. Nm 26: 12.

6. In the papyrus we have ⲁ ⲁ, the usual symbols for “so-and-so” (NN).

7. Perhaps Coptic ethoou, “evil,” thus Maltomini, 75, n. 22.

8. The reference is probably to writing the words on a tin plate. Cf. PGM VII. 459, 462; PGM XCIV. 37.

9. This word also occurs in PGM XIII. 946; VII. 478. According to LSJ, this Doric term can mean the following: (1) “a darling, sweetheart”; (2) as an adjective, it refers to singing love songs; (3) a name of a small star; and (4) the name of a gem. In the PGM, both the context and the etymology suggest the term means “a love charm.”

10. Reading αἰμοφνῆ, an apparent neologism in the PGM. Such formations of new words—usually epithets—abound in the magical papyri. Many of the new formations in the list that follows represent appropriate designations for Hekate and other chthonic deities. For parallels in each case, consult Maltomini, ad loc.

grains and mix it with gum of “Hercules’ woundwort.”
For a victory: / [Wear] a tooth of a hyena, from the right side of the jaw . . . one of the upper ones. . . .

11. Reading αἱμωχνη. Apparently a new formation from αἷμα, “blood” and χέω, “to pour out, shed.” Related epithets having to do with blood and applying to Hekate are listed by Maltomini, 77, n. 26.

12. Reading perhaps ρίζοποις for ρίζοποις. The expression is problematic and the restoration very tentative; nevertheless the association of roots with both Selene and Hekate is attested. Consult the references in Maltomini, 78, n. 27.

13. Reading ἀνδρογύνη for ἀνδρωγενή (cf. the variant spelling of the Greek in PGM CXXIII f, fr. A., 5). In PGM IV. 2610, Hekate is coupled with Hermes as an androgynous being.

14. The meaning of this unattested word ἀνδρως is at best very speculative; however, there is no question that the word originally formed a meaningful Greek epithet having to do with ἀνήρ, “man.” For similar, anomalous formations, consult the occurrences in PGM as cited by Maltomini, 78, n. 29. In addition to his philological parallels, compare the term ἀνήνωρ, “unmanly.”

15. The word αἱμογενής is now attested on a second-century inscription from Egypt, SEG 8. 374. Although LSJ, Supplement, s.v., p. 5, translates this “related by blood,” Maltomini is correct in suggesting here “born of/with blood.”

16. Reading κροκοβαφή for κροκοβανή? [R.D.K.] Maltomini suggests perhaps κροκοφανή (unattested). Saffron is associated with Hekate in Orphic Hymn 1. 2; 71. 1, and elsewhere with Demeter and Persephone.

17. The word is attested in Tzetzes, Alleg. II. XX. 226, p. 132, Marranga. A similar epithet is used of Hekate in Lydus, De mens. 3. 10.

18. An appropriate epithet of Hekate (-Selene), thus Maltomini, 79, n. 33.

19. Reading κρονον(ον) λευκον.

20. Parallels adduced by Maltomini, 82–83, show that in Christian magic a historiola was used, according to which Elizabeth says to John the Baptist in her womb: “Come out, child, Christ is calling you. . . .” In our papyrus this historiola appears to have been confused with the account of Lazarus in the tomb, thus attesting the analogy of womb and tomb.

Arrighetti et al., "Nuovi papiri magici in copto, greco e aramaico," Studi Classici e Orientali 29 (1979), section II, pp. 55–124. The six papyrus fragments translated here correspond to those numbered 1–6 consecutively by Maltomini. They have been grouped here under the same Roman numeral because they represent duplications (with some variations) of the same magical text. The text, which contains a series of peculiar and difficult epithets, preserves portions of a magico-medical handbook. Unless otherwise stated, the notes that follow are summarized from those of the editor. For a full discussion of each of the terms and of the voces magicæ, one should consult the edition of Maltomini.

21. Cf. n. 14. Something peculiar has occurred in the transmission of this epithet.

SALAKALOU, KERKĒBI, and KAULYOUKAU. Fragment B contains only a handful of letters, whereas fragment C preserves an elaborate magical figure.

b. Papyrus no. 9 (Tav. XII) 116–17, contains nine lines of which only a few words can be positively identified: ALLELOUIA, SABAŌTH, and ADONAI. The other side of the papyrus preserves portions of an Aramaic magical text published by Marrassini in the same journal, p. 128.

c. Papyrus 10 (Tav. VIII) 117–18 dates to the fifth century and is made up of two tiny fragments which cannot be read. Fragment B contains portions of a Coptic formula.

d. Papyrus 11 (Tav. XII) 118, is made up of two fragments that are too small even to assign a date.

e. Papyrus 12 (Tav. XII) 119, is paleographically akin to Papyrus 6 (PGM CXXIII f.). Only the names ADONAI and SABAŌTH can be recognized.

f. Papyrus 13 (Tav. XI) 119–20, assigned to the end of the fifth century, also contains an Aramaic text on the other side (see Marrassini, pap. no. 3, p. 129). The text preserves portions of a formula which reads, “I conjure you by your holy name . . . BAROCH SĒMO. . . .”

Maltomini, “Osservazioni al testo di alcuni papiri magici greci, (III.),” Studi classici e orientali 32 (1982): 239–40. The poorly preserved text appears to be a spell for separation.
